Town employee is suspended by board

Two members of the sewer commission voted last week to suspend the sewer treatment operator with pay until a full disciplinary hearing is held Jan. 27.

Sixteen-year town employee Manuel Salvador was away on vacation at the time, and was not notified of any disciplinary action until it was reported in a local newspaper Friday morning. He was not present during the open meeting held at 8:45 Wednesday morning, Dec. 31.

Commissioners Edward Guild and Charles DeSantis voted to suspend the veteran supervisor with pay until the January 27 closed meeting. Commissioner Gary Vanderweil was absent from last week's meeting and.did not vote on the matter.

Attorney Robert Garrett, who was appointed the commission's labor counsel by selectmen at their meeting Dec. 29, was also present at the Dec. 31 sewer commission session.

According to commissioner Guild, he requested town counsel's assistance in the matter. He met with Richard Henderson the evening of Dec. 24, who recommended the commission be represented by labor counsel. Selectmen decided at their Dec. 29 meeting to approve the request and named Garrett labor counsel for the commission.

Supervisor Salvador has been on a two-week vacation and was due to return to work Wednesday, Jan. 7. Salvador said for the past few years, he has taken the same two vacation weeks during the holidays. The supervisor said he did not leave town during the vacation, and was never notified by the commissioners of any pending disciplinary action.

According to Guild, it was the commission's primary concern on Dec. 22 that the plant was left without a state certified operator at the helm. Although there is currently a 17 year-old worker at the treatment plant, he is not a certified operator. The state requires that a certified supervisor be there during regular working hours.

"That was our main concern," Guild said, "that we didn't have a certified operator there. Our primary concern was to get the plant supervised."

The commission hired an independent contract firm, York Water Consultants, to supervise the plant. They arrived at the plant Dec. 24 and will remain through the Jan. 27 hearing, Guild said.

No major damage from storm

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

As one police officer said, "we weathered it real well."

From all accounts, last Friday's fiesty winds and rising tides did minimal damage to coastal homes here. Officials, from the police to the civil defense director concur, the January 2 storm cannot be compared to the wreckage caused by the Blizzard of 1978.

As storm warnings were posted, Civil Defense Director Arthur Lehr became involved about 7 Friday morning. Selectmen did not declare an emergency, but an evacuation center was established at the high school. Explorers from Post 28 were there to man the temporary shelter. The teens also assisted with the communications center located at the highway department headquarters.

"Myself, Supt. Hart and the police and fire chiefs decided to open the evacuation center on a small, short-term basis," Lehr explained. "There were no beds, and no kitchen as we had during Gloria and the '78 blizzard."

About a dozen residents traveled to the temporary shelter where they were given coffee and drinks during their stay. "We had the Red Cross standing by with a field kitchen, in case there was need for a

Bettinger looks back on a town he couldn't afford

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Jeff Bettinger is gone, but he has not forgotten Cohasset.

From his new home in Weymouth, he recalled his accomplishments as a member of various committees and commissions here.

"Getting the watershed protection bylaw passed at Town Meeting in 1986," Bettinger said, "was probably the most significant thing I accomplished in Cohasset. It was a lot of work."

Cohasset Town Meeting took the first step and appropriated $20,000 in 1983, to bring in a consulting firm to evaluate the water supply, he said. "We wanted to determine the area's tributary to the well fields, Lily Pond and the Aaron River reservoir."

The selectmen formed the watershed area committee to oversee the evaluation.

The new committee consisted of members from the board of selectmen, water commission, planning board, conservation commission, board of health and drainage committee, as well as independent citizens.

As an "independent citizen," Bettinger was elected chairman and the committee got to work.

"It was important to have input," Bettinger commented. "This was exciting, because it was one of the first 'hybrid' committees, though at times it was difficult to manage, to keep focused."

First, the committee had to find a firm to hire.

"We sent out requests and conducted interviews. We finally selected Camp Dresser & McKee, an engineering firm from Boston," he said.

"Next, we tried to determine philosophically what we could do. Our alternatives were: to create a general bylaw; a zoning bylaw; health regulations or a combination of the three," he added.

Eventually, the committee decided on a zoning bylaw, which would set regulations for the watershed area.

"The regulations are applicable no matter what zone you're in," he explained, "whether it be commercial, residential 2 ..."

For instance, he said,the regulations stipulate that there can be no new underground storage tanks for hazardous materials, such as gasoline, in the wetlands area.

"You won't find a new gas station going in in the wetlands area," Bettinger said. "However, an old gas station can replace its tanks, but the tanks have to be especially solid, with double walls.

"It doesn't take much of a leak from a gas station to contaminate a well and make it useless," he commented.

"There are significant use-limitations for the area," he added. "No junkyards, no landfills - That's a touchy one; no slaughterhouses or paint factories or things like

Heights landfill meeting termed 'productive'

Town officials are pleased with the results of Tuesday morning's meeting with state environmental experts regarding the status of Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL).

Sen. William Golden requested the public meeting to review the continuing negotiations between the town and the privately-owned landfill.

The town's special counsel, Michael Leon, said he was pleased with the informal hearing, and termed the discussions with state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) officials "productive."

One major issue discussed during the meeting, he said, was the landfill's request for a variance from the Class One groundwater discharge permit. The DEQE officials were unwilling to vary the state standards for the discharge permit, Leon said, although CHL attorney Anton Moehrke argued that the groundwater was contaminated from sodium chloride flowing from the adjacent DPW salt shed.

The state officials refused to allow the variance request, noting that such a claim could be the basis of separate litigation between CHL and the DPW.

"It was very clear from the state that they expect CHL to apply for the Class One permit without a variance," Leon added.

The discharge permit would be for Area Four-A, a two-and-a-half acre section which CHL would like to utilize. This area of the landfill would extend the life

Cohasset's week . . .

Leash law discussion

Selectman James Gallagher suggested this week that selectmen propose a leash law for Cohasset.

Selectmen decided they will talk to Animal Control Officer Richard Yokum in the future about what a more stringent leash law would require.

Gallagher said that he receives calls from residents "who have given me 20 to 30 reasons why we need a leash law. Everytime someone said they called (the animal control officer), they never get a response in ample time. I can't see continuing the way we're doing. I feel a leash law has got to happen. It's a poor excuse for what we have now."

Currently,the by-law states that an owner must restrain a dog on their property. No dog is supposed to run loose.

Selectman Cliff Mitman noted that another law won't necessarily solve the problem. Enforcement of the law is a more adequate solution, "although what can we expect for $3,000 a year (the part-time salary of the animal control officer)?" he asked.

Selectmen said they will meet with Officer Yokum to discuss what would be necessary to more strictly enforce the leash law.

Temporary firefighter request

Selectmen said they will support the fire chief's reserve fund transfer request of $30,117 to hire a temporary firefighter until July 1.

The request is necessary, he explained, as a result of rising overtime costs accrued because of the need to maintain 24 active firefighters in the department. There is one firefighter, Richard Conley, who has been assigned light duty because of a work-related injury. He is unable to perform active duty, and therefore one firefighter is called in on time-and-a-half overtime when Conley is on duty.

"I'd say that 95 percent of the time that he is on, someone is called to fill in as an active firefighter. And that's on overtime," the chief explained.

The chief calculated that the cost of hiring a temporary firefighter is less than the continued cost of manning the station with an overtime employee. He figured the overtime man would cost about $37,000 until January 1. The temporary man would work out to about $30,117.

There is currently about $8-$10,000 remaining in the overtime account which was budgeted this year at $52,000. The chief figured that amount will last five to eight more weeks.

Selectmen supported the budget transfer and will request a Civil Service list from which to select the temporary employee. If the advisory committee approves the transfer, Chief Brock said he would like to have the new firefighter on duty by Feb. 1.

The chief noted that if selectmen hire the temporary person under Civil Service, at any time a permanent position becomes available, that person will be eligible for appointment.

Moratorium on graves

Selectmen supported a suggestion by Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle to prohibit the sale of graves during the winter months, except in an emergency.

Laugelle explained that when residents want to purchase graves, the sites must be opened. This is difficult in the winter months, he said. "And it's getting to the point," he said, "where there's not that many sites available."

Laugelle suggested that in a certain designated area of Woodside, Beechwood and Greengate cemeteries, only emergency requests be granted during the months of January, February and March. After those months, he explained, the plots could be available for sale to the general public.

Laugelle assured the board that if there is a death in a family, a plot could be made available during the winter. Executive Secretary Donald Andrew will work with Laugelle to alter the wording to the cemetery by-laws.

Disturbing odors continue

The disturbing odors are continuing in the vicinity of Cohasset Heights Ltd.

The police department was notified Monday night about the odor that has persisted for about a month along Crocker Lane near the privately-owned landfill. The fire department, which had just responded to a car fire in the area of Cohasset Knoll, joined police at the landfill that night.

"We went up there to find the source of the odor which had been reported that evening to police," Fire Chief Daniel Brock stated. "We've been trying to document the dates and times and where these odors have been reported."

The board of health has requested the assistance of the state Division of Air Quality Control to locate the source of the odor.

"We actually picked up the odor as we were driving past the landfill from the Knoll," the chief stated. "That's why we went up there to look around."

The fire chief said no cause was discovered during the Monday night search. "We've been up there on the average of every other week for more than a month now," he added. "It's not a harmful odor, because we've been up there so much. So it's being processed through the state as a complaint and a nuisance."

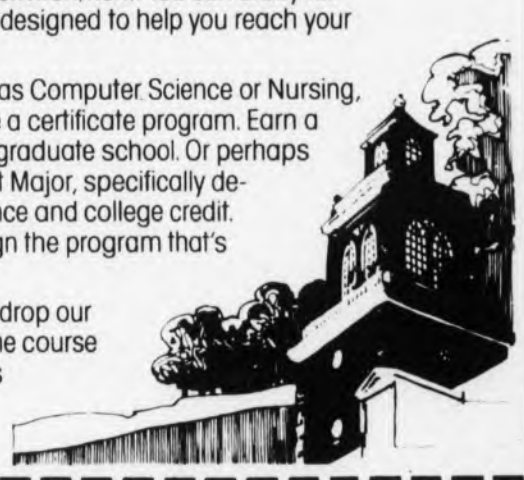
For more than a month, many residents have called the local board of health, complaining about the potent odor. Although local officials have yet to uncover a source, they agree it appears to emanate from the privately-owned landfill on Crocker Lane.

Budget requests approved

At their meeting Dec. 29, the selectmen rubber-stamped most of the budget requests from committees and departments under their jurisdiction.

Most budget requests called for minor increases because of salary adjustments and the purchases of new equipment, or replacements for old equipment.

The board also voted to approve 1987 license renewals for automobile dealers, common victuallers and entertainment.



Cohasset attorney John Spencer was appointed special counsel for matters regarding the taking of Lily Pond by eminent domain.

The board accepted "with regret" the resignation of Mary J. McArthur from the U.S. Constitution bicentennial committee. Patricia Murphy of 27 Highland Avenue was appointed to fill the vacancy.

Senior center grants

Selectmen indicated their support of two grant applications made by the senior center director for additional personnel.

Center director Kathy Bryanton explained Monday night that the grant applications have been forwarded to the state Department of Elder Affairs where they will compete for funding along with hundreds of other communities.

The first grant requests $7,844 to hire a part-time person on a contractual basis. This outreach person would go into the community, identify and interview every senior not previously identified by the Council on Aging. A follow-up visit by the worker would include a trip to the senior center.

This worker, Bryanton explained, would specifically identify the "frail and handicapped" elderly, many of whom do not presently take advantage of the senior center.

The second grant was completed in conjunction with Norwell and Scituate. It would provide funding for transportation of the frail and handicapped elderly, those 75 years and older, or anyone with physical disabilities.

The current Senior Shuttle van is not equipped to handle handicapped riders, Bryanton said. The SCOOT-type van would accommodate wheelchairs and other adaptive equipment for the physically disabled.

Transportation would be available to the tri-town riders for 14 hours over a three-day period. A dispatcher would be in the Cohasset Senior Center. The van would transport the riders to local medical appointments and social activities, she added.

Employee suspended . . .

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) twice reprimanded the sewer commission for allowing the treatment plant to operate without a certified supervisor on the premises two times in October.

Guild refused to discuss the reasons for Salvador's suspension, saying he was following the advice of labor counsel not to disclose the matter.

Salvador would not comment on the case, other than to say he was in the process of securing legal counsel in preparation of the Jan. 27 hearing. He would not say whether he would request that the meeting be open to the public.

According to the agreement ratified by the sewer commission with York Water Consultants, the private firm will be paid $1000 a week for their services. Salvador will continue to be paid his $30,000 annual salary throughout the suspension period until Jan. 27.

Salvador is a longtime resident of nearby Elm Court. When asked if the sewer commission ever requested that he cut short his vacation and return early to supervise the treatment plant, Salvador replied, "never."

Town marina proposal subject of Jan. 12 hearing

Selectmen will hold a public hearing regarding the proposed town marina at their Jan. 12 meeting.

The harbor study committee Monday night requested approval from selectmen to apply to the zoning board of appeals. Town Counsel Richard Henderson informed the study committee that the first hurdle to overcome would be to obtain two variances for a lot leased by Yankee Oil to the town for a parking area, and for the installation of a public, revenue-producing marina in a residential area.

Other approvals must then be granted from the capital budget committee, and the conservation commission. Two articles must also be submitted to the town meeting, Henderson advised.

But when the harbor study committee asked for selectmen's approval to procede, Selectman Rocco Laugelle refused. "The opposition's going to raise a lot of hell, saying you guys double-crossed them and snuck up here," he said, noting that the harbor study committee's request was made too late to be published on the meeting's agenda.

"What we're doing is a little under the table here," he added. "We promised them (the marina opponents) a public hearing and now we're saying (to the proponents) go ahead."

Selectmen then decided that before they grant the study committee approval to go before the zoning board, a public hearing on the plans should be scheduled.

Although they agreed the zoning board would be a proper opportunity to hear all sides of the plans, selectmen decided to schedule the public hearing first, as they had promised the opponents last month.

The plans currently proposed by the harbor study committee call for a 72-boat finger slip marina, completely financed and operated by the town. The marina would be located off Yankee Oil Co. property in Cohasset Cove. Parking would be available along a 215 square-foot parcel on the company's land which is leased to the town at a $1 annual rate. A provision of the lease is that the parcel be used by town residents only.

Harbor committee members came before selectmen Monday night initially to request their endorsement of a reserve fund transfer of $5,000. That money would be used for engineering plans to bring before the zoning board.

Town Counsel Henderson had explained that the committee should be fully prepared before they bring the variance application before the zoning board. It would also be helpful to have professionally-drawn plans for the conservation commission, he added.

The harbor committee came before selectmen this week for their approval before they bring the budget transfer request to the advisory committee.

As committee member L. Emmett Holt stated, "selectmen must decide if you want us to procede with this project. And the first step is the zoning board of appeals. If not, it kills the whole project."

Selectmen debated whether a full hearing before the zoning board would constitute the public hearing they had promised the local fishermen last month.

It was then that Selectman Laugelle suggested that they schedule a separate public hearing, as they had indicated three weeks ago.

Selectman Cliff Mitman suggested the matter be placed on the agenda for next week's selectmen meeting. Otherwise, he said, it may look like the board decided on a matter placed "last minute" on this week's agenda.

Town Counsel Henderson also advised selectmen that under the terms of the 1983 agreement with Yankee Oil Co., the "owner of the premises may not oppose the application process" by the town to maintain a parking area on that lot. That means, he said, that a representative of the company may not oppose the town's application for a variance to use that land as a parking lot.

An attorney representing Yankee Oil, Kevin Donnolly, had expressed the firm's opposition to the marina when the plans were originally presented to selectmen Dec. 15.

"If Yankee shows up next week," Selectman Mitman said, "we can remind them of this agreement."

Water board urges land purchase

Water commissioners will propose that town meeting approve the purchase of 37 acres of land surrounding Lily Pond.

Dec. 16, the commission received notification by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), approving the eminent domain taking by the town. The approval was granted based on the town's need to protect the public water reservoir at Lily Pond.

The commission has hired Richard Partridge of Hingham to appraise the 37.15 acres of land surrounding Lily Pond. He has not yet developed a dollar value for the land, according to water commission chairman William Montuori.

A warrant article will be submitted by the commission for the April town meeting, requesting eminent-domain taking of the property which was slated for development. Current property owners Edward L. Britt and Aaron J. Rosenberg had applied to the planning board for permission to subdivide the land into 11 house lots. The board denied the plans in 1985, and the owners have appealed the decision to superior court.

During the hearing before the DEQE, chairman Montuori expressed his concern that the development of the site in such proximity to the reservoir and to the intake of the water treatment plant would have an adverse effect upon the quality of water in Lily Pond.

The state approved the eminent domain-taking under the provisions of Chapter 40, Section 41 of the general laws in order to properly protect the source of the public water supply. Under that state law, any land purchased in this manner will be under the control of the board of water commissioners.

It's on to a new Cruisers record

By Mike Berger
Mariner Staff

The world isn't over for Eddie and the Cruisers after losing for the first time in 55 games. In fact, according to Cohasset High School basketball coach Eddie Minelli, the hoop world is just beginning.

During the Christmas holidays, Cohasset fell to Newton South 77-69 to fall just one win short of establishing the state schoolboy record of 55 straight wins against in-state competition.

Several considerations must be reviewed to realize how spectacular the win streak was accomplished and Minelli adds he couldn't be prouder of this year's edition of the Cruisers.

Newton South is one of two large high schools in Newton. This particular school is also favored to win Division I which has the largest schools in Massachusetts.

Second, the Cruisers are hurting. Tom Larson and David Schumaker have fractured tibias. Minelli noted, "It's like a crack in the mirror. You can play but you play in pain."

Larson and forward Brian Edwards also suffered sprained ankles and another forward Matt Maloney also reported a "tender ankle."

To reach the pinnacle of 54 games, this year's squad inhereited a perfect 49-0 instate record. Since the season began, Cohasset beat Abington, Norwell, Scituate, Sandwich and Newton North, inheriting a perfect 49-0 record.

Several of the first five games were played back to back and this may have led to the injury situation. However, Cohasset still had quite a good shot to beat Newton South in its own back yard.

The Cruisers led 20-16 at the end of the first quarter, 33-30 at the half, 51-49 at the end of the third quarter. "You could tell we were running out of gas," said Minelli.

Newton South then spurted to a 10-2 offensive run which propelled the team to a eight point lead with nearly six minutes left in the game.

Minelli called a quick time-out, regrouped his defensive strategy and with one minute remaining in the game, the Cruisers were only down by one point and had control of the ball.

Then, the Cruisers ran out of gas. Newton South then hit several free throws in a row for the eventual eight point victory.

"These players really amaze me. We could have surrendered very early in the game with all our inexperience and injuries. But we didn't. These guys are simply amazing," said Minelli.

With now eight days of rest, the Cruisers are now set to go on a new stretch of victorious basketball. Cohasset has not lost to a Division III team in three years and without a doubt Minelli says it may not happen again this year. "We are the odds on favorite to repeat again. Now, more than ever, I am convinced of this."

Even though Cohasset lost, Minelli said he would schedule two tough Division I teams again in the same situation. "If you are going to be the best, you have to beat the best." In fact, Minelli has scheduled Newton North and South again for later in the basketball schedule.

"Our potential is there. We can be as good as any team in any division. There is no limit to what we can accomplish," said Minelli.

The amazing aspect to this year's squad is the obvious lack of height in the Cruiser lineup. Against Newton North, Cohasset faced a lineup of 6-8, 6-5 and 6-4. Cohasset's lineup is 6-4, 6-2 and 6-1.

"Obviously we don't have the height. But we have excellent shooters, we don't make mistakes and our attitude is superb," said Minelli.

The top players to date are guards David Schultz, David Schumaker, forwards Brian Edwards, Tom Larson, Mike Smith, Matt Maloney and Jason Marsac. Minelli expects he will be playing nine players by the end of the year. The depth of the team since the full kitchen. But we didn't need it," the director noted. Most of the dozen visitors remained about two or three hours, he added, waiting out the high afternoon tide before returning home.

Cohasset weathered winter storm 'real well'

The center was secured again in anticipation of an evening high tide. But by then the winds had changed,and there proved no need for emergency shelter, Lehr said.

The civil defense director credited "the good teamwork" of the town departments in easing problems caused by the storm. "The highway department, the tree and park department and the police and fire departments were all standing by waiting to help out. It's all very coordinated and everyone works together," he added.

Some streets, such as Margin, the Cove area, and sections of Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road were closed temporarily when power lines and a couple of telephone poles were downed. The Cove area, which habitually floods in a major ocean storm, was closed to travellers during the noon high tide.

The Wakeman family on Atlantic Avenue experienced some damage to their boat house and a dingy. But Mrs. Wakeman explained that the huge boulders which guard the rear of their home, once again proved an impenetrable barrier between their house and the swirling ocean waves.

"We weathered well in 1978, too" Mrs. Wakeman said. "The rocks must be placed by God in some magical way, because this house has weathered many storms."

The Wakeman home lost electrical power for about an hour and a half when two utility lines were pulled down by the force of the winds and flooding tides.

Even the gawking sightseers who traveled along the coastal roads during the height of the storm did not bother the Atlantic Avenue residents. "We're set far back from the road, so they posed no problem for us," she noted. The barrier which prevented people from traveling down Atlantic Avenue didn't bother me. I could scoot back to my house with no problem."

The longtime Cohasset resident said, "there's no comparison between last week's storm and 1978. It was enormously cold then and we had no electricity. It was very different. This was minor compared to that storm."

After weathering that storm, however, the Wakemans were prepared for this one. As word of the approaching winter storm was broadcast, they retrieved their kerosene lamps and down sleeping bags. "I'm pleased we didn't need to use them," Mrs. Wakeman commented.

Harbormaster Harry Ritter, who was at the helm during the 1978 blizzard, also belied any comparison between that phenomenon and last week's storm.

The only damage, he said this week, was a single town float and that, he noted, was scheduled for major repairs this winter. It had broken loose during the storm and washed up against the seawall in the harbor. "There are 36 boats in the harbor," he said Monday, "and that one float was the only thing that got loose. There was no other property damage in the harbor."

Fire Chief Daniel Brock affirmed there were no "real" emergencies throughout the day last Friday. Most of the day, firefighters responded to smoke detectors and fire alarms set off by water that seeped into circuit breakers. Firefighters spent the day alongside town workers, securing blocked streets and responding to calls from worried neighbors.

"We had a couple of calls from people who were worried about elderly residents who live alongside the coast," Chief Brock said. "But they did fine. One man we checked on was doing great — they're used to weathering these types of storms."

Police Sgt. David Pomarico acknowledged the entire town escaped without major casualties. "We weathered it real well," he said in retrospect. "No trees were downed, as far as I can recall. And the biggest problem, other than a couple of utility poles along Atlantic Avenue were the sightseers."

Streams of gawking sightseers took advantage of a day off and traveled along the narrow, winding roads along Cohasset's coastline. "I can't believe anyone with any common sense would be driving out in that storm," Sgt. Pomarico stated. "It's a real problem, but in a snow storm like that, it's impossible for the police to stop and write tickets and tow the cars. We're too busy answering calls. We do the best we can, but it would be less of a problem if people would just let us do what we have to do without getting in the way. Cars along these streets creates a very dangerous traffic problem for emergency vehicles that may have to get down the road."

Basically, he reiterated, there was no real damage caused by the year's first snowstorm. "We came out of this one real lucky," he added.

The seas were angry as they roared across this coastal home on Jerusalem Road last Friday.

Selectman Sullivan declines re-election bid

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Diane Sullivan, chairman of the board of selectmen, announced Dec. 29 she will not seek another term.

She explained, her family asked her not to seek reelection in April's town election. "I wanted to announce this early, so those who might be interested in running can prepare now."

Sullivan has served as selectman since 1985, when she replaced John DeBassio. She was elected chairman, when Mary Jane McArthur resigned from the board June 30, 1986.

"It always has been my feeling," she said, "that when a person comes before a board, he should be treated with the utmost respect. You are there by the privilege of the people."

The equitable manner in which she handled harbor issues and the fortitude she showed in coming down on those who violated regulations, she cited as two of her greatest strengths as selectman.

Sullivan said she is also proud of her work in establishing a feasibility study for the clean-up of Little Harbor, and of her initiatives as a member of the South Shore Coalition in garnering grants from the state.

"You have to be prepared to give this job the time it requires," she said. "You can't just show up for meetings; you have to be prepared."

Sullivan added, the task of serving as chairman "has been close to being a full-time job. It's tough on the family if you give it the time it requires."

Along with studying the issues and attending meetings, she noted, the job requires being available to the townspeople, helping them solve their problems.

Before she joined the board of selectmen, Sullivan served on the police-fire station renovation committee, the sewer advisory committee and the drainage committee.

So, it is a good bet she will continue her service to the town in some capacity, after she leaves her present position.

"I haven't considered what I'll do next," she commented, "because there is too much to do between now and the Town Meeting in April."

Sullivan noted, there are a number of capital projects the board has been preparing for presentation to Cohasset voters.

"My number one priority," she said, "is the sewer program."

As a member of the tri-town committee, Sullivan has been working with selectmen and sewer commissioners from Hull and Hingham to forge an intermunicipal sewer agreement.

"I think there is a good, strong possibility we can finalize an agreement with Hull," she said, "I'm optimistic."

Diane Sullivan

The agreement would provide Cohasset to utilize treatment facilities in Hull for a fee.

Sullivan explained, such an arrangement would benefit both towns.

"A resolution was passed at Hull Town Meeting," she noted, "and everything is favorable at the moment."

Sullivan said her number two priority is the renovation of the police and fire stations in the building at 62 and 64 Elm Street.

"That building is 20 years old," she commented, "and it's in bad shape."

Other capital projects will include: an addition to Town Hall; repairs to school buildings; and the construction of a transfer station for the town's trash.

As she prepares to finish the job she has worked at for two years, Sullivan noted, "The town government is alive and well. The town still has a lot of problems to face, but if the people get together, the problems can be solved.

"I will miss being on the board of selectmen," she added. "I love it. I have acquired a lot of knowledge and I feel suited to it.

"I love the town," Sullivan said. "It has been a privilege for me to serve the community."

Her colleagues agreed, the dedicated chairman will be hard to replace.

"You've done a great job," Selectman James Gallagher told her. "The town will have a great loss."

around town

☐ Liam Stanford and Doug Bennett certainly ended their vacation on a grand scale...they both took first place in their weight class in the Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament! Pat O'Connor came through the same tournament with a super effort. He came in fifth in his weight class. Good work fellas, and continued success to you all throughout the season.

☐ Liam had another scheduled event this weekend. He and Bob Durkin both went to the Faregrounds where they received Player of the Week awards from the radio station, WATD. Both of those boys will have to build on trophy rooms to hold all of the awards that they have won!

☐ Congratulations to Dennis and Anne (Evans) McMenamy, who became parents of a fine baby boy on Dec. 13. His name is Dennis, Jr. Wonder how grandparents Frank and Anne Evans of Fairoaks Lane will keep all of these wonderful grandchildren's names straight, much less birthdays!! Am sure that they love it!

☐ Libby Silvia had a wonderful holiday, she just returned from Huntington, California, where her daughter Joan lives. While she was visiting, she was delighted to be able to see her daughter and her granddaughter become nurses...they graduated from Santa Anna College on Dec. 18, and next year both Joan and her daughter Geraldine hope to receive their black stripes. Joan is married to Pat Loughran, and Jeff and Amy Loughran were on hand for the occasion too. This was the first time in ten years that Libby had Christmas with her daughter Joan, and you can bet that it certainly wasn't her last! She had a ball, and now knows how easy it is to hop a plane to sunshine and family!

(Kathy Perlow)

☐ We understand that Krissy Pozatek was a "vision" recently, when she was a part of the Derby Academy's swedish tradition and paid a visit to Headmaster Thomas J. Waters during Morning Chapel. She was dressed in white and crowned with greens and candles, portraying St. Lucia.

☐ Have been asked if anyone knows of a photography course available "around town". Seems that a lot of cameras were received as Christmas gifts, and the directions are confusing. Perhaps anyone either giving a course or knowing of one that is being given might get in touch with me so that I can "spread the word".

☐ This year makes it the 25th for the Class of 1962, CHS alumunus, so be prepared to have another celebration. The 20th seems to have taken place yesterday...two fellow grads, Bill "Bach" and Jim Farley, have already expressed a deep interest, so plans should be underway shortly. Anyone interested should give me a call.

☐ Dr. David Demick was part of the team of doctors that ran in The Colonnade's ninth annual Doctors Run to benefit the American Heart Association (Greater Boston Division) recently. The event raised more than $18,000, and the race took place in the Back Bay, Beacon Hill and Mass General Hospital areas. Dr. Demick is to be applauded, especially when you consider that the weather was hardly conducive for running as it was below freezing! That's dedication.

☐ We hear there is to be another wedding in the Keating family...report to follow.

☐ That's all from here, don't forget to keep your news coming.

A sad farewell

It's sad whenever friends leave. It takes a long time to make good friends, and it hurts when we part.

Many people in this town feel that way about Jeff and Nancy Bettinger.

They were not natives of this town, as many had presumed. Yet, in the short time they lived in our community, they were so involved and aware of our town's issues and problems, many assumed they had lived here many years.

Cohasset was simply a temporary resting place for the young couple. They had lived in a rented home along Summer Street, hoping that one day they could afford to purchase a house in this community they had "adopted."

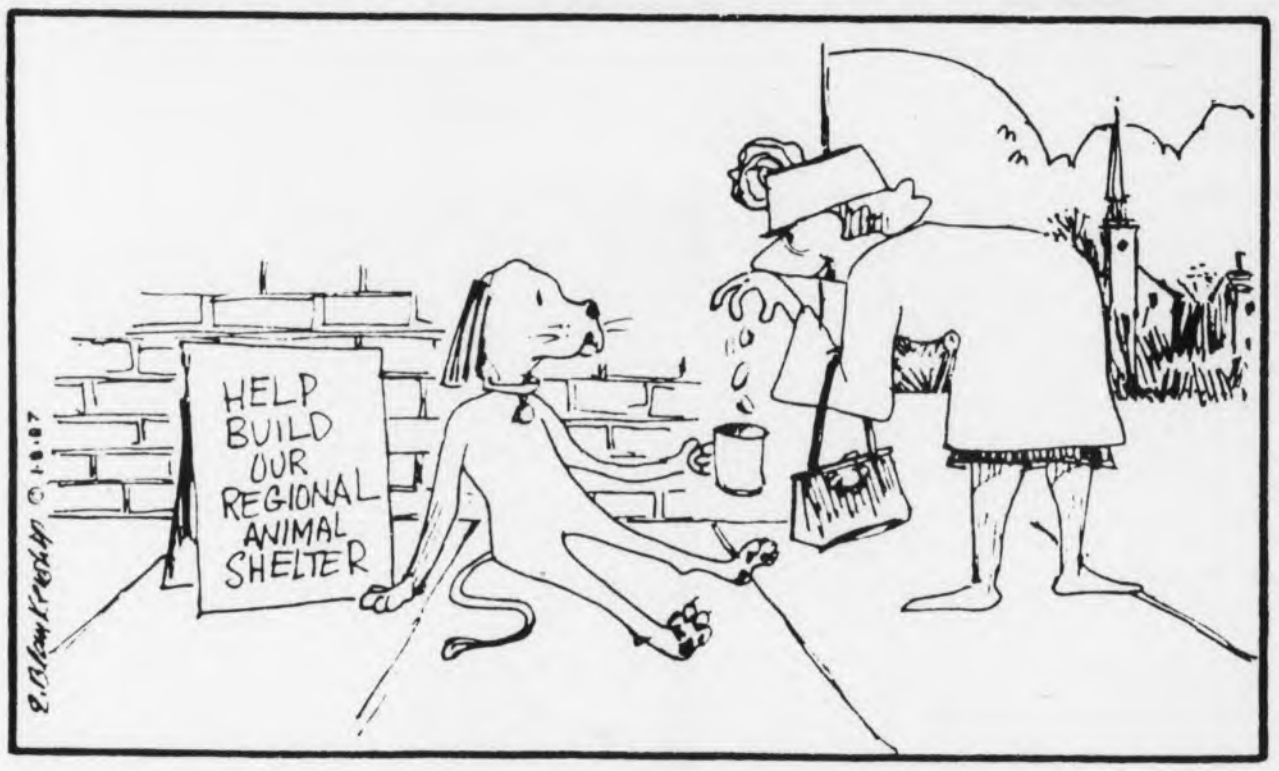
But the economics of this town precluded that. This young, well-educated and professional couple could not afford the sizeable down payment necessary to purchase an expensive Cohasset home.

And now, Weymouth is their home.

It's rare when we've seen a young man so committed to a town – an 'adopted' hometown at that. But Jeff was always here when an engineering question had to be tackled, or there was vacancy on a town committee.

Jeff is remembered as the guiding force behind the town's move to adopt a watershed district. He was also one of the prime motivators of the annual household hazardous waste collection day.

He was an active member of the town's Democratic committee and never failed to attend a town meeting or election.



It's really sad for us that the Bettingers couldn't afford to stay here. Our only hope is that someday, with equity built into their Weymouth home, they will purchase a house here and return.

We should not feel guilty that the Bettingers, like so many other middle-class couples, can not buy homes in our town. We can not undo the types of housing developments that have raised real estate prices in town.

We should feel proud that our homes are considered a beautiful asset to the community. But we must also realize that a certain portion of the population is therefore prohibited from this town.

And even though we hope the Bettingers and others will return and help us thrive, we feel remorse. Without an equitable amount of affordable housing, we will continue to shut the door on people who would add so much to our community.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset Animal Control Officer Richard Yocum endorses plan for area animal shelter in Hingham. Cites town's serious problem of free-roaming stray dogs. 'Could pick up 25 to 35 dogs a day with no place to put them.' Dog owners at fault. Wide support for facility. Approval given to build shelter on Bare Cove site, serving six towns

A different education solution offered

To the Editor:

The Boston Herald in its recent editorial entitled "The non-shortage of school teachers' has done the majority of public school teachers in Massachusetts and in the United States a great injustice. Never before in our nation's history have public school teachers taken the blame for all our country's ills than in the 1980's. We in the trenches of public education have learned from the press and from our enlightened Secretary of Education, William J. Bennett, that there are simple remedies for complex educational problems. All we in the Bay State have to do is "revamp our certification process and hordes of the "best and the brighest" college graduates will rush to fill Math, Science, English, Language and History vacancies in our public schools. What a joke this kind of naive thinking is. The teaching profession is, in a way, like any other profession. New blood is attracted to it only if its pay scale and overall public image is competitive and promising. Years of low starting pay plus a rigid ceiling on how much money a teacher can earn at his Art have made teacher morale and buying power quite low.

No bright young college grad, freed of the present teacher certification qualifications, would hastily sign on to teach in our public schools. Low pay and the constant snipping by "so-called" educational experts have made the profession low on the desired list of vocations. I have taught in the public schools of the Commonwealth for thirty years and few, if any, of the brighest students I have met say they would even consider pursuing a teaching career.

Using such language as "disaster scenario" and a claim that public school teachers have received "significant pay raises" in recent years The Herald editorial writer down plays the gloomy predictions of teacher shortages in the Bay State in the near future. The majority of teachers in Massachusetts entered the profession in the late 1950's and early 1960's. Most of these teachers will retire in the next ten years - that is reality. Many of the professions best and brightest Math and Science Teachers have already left the classroom to pursue more lucrative careers in Industry. That is reality. Where will all their replacements come from? Neither Mr. Bennett nor the National Center for Education Information have the least idea.

If one reads between the lines of speeches given by Secretary Bennett and press releases given by so called "prestigious" educational research bodies then one reaches the conclusion that the teaching profession is presently filled with a bunch of incompetent souls. That is not so. To remain in teaching today requires an act of devotion and courage. Few plaudits and a host of negative reviewers face the public school teacher today. Such a negative diet is not a firm inducement for any one to enter the profession or remain long in the classroom.

Wake up Mr. Bennett, wake up Boston Herald, wake up National Center for Education Information Pay Your Teachers a Salary Competitive with Industry and the quality of the product and its future will be assured. Failure to do so will endanger our nation's greatest asset - its young people.

Intern grateful for legislative experience

To the Editor:

Being a member of the Cohasset High Alternative School, I am allowed to intern in Representative Murray's office on Mondays to learn more about our legislation and how it works. I am able to attend local affairs meetings to learn about zoning, municiple finance, and home rule and taxation hearings to learn about how taxes are decided upon and levied. I've learned how to file bills and have filed a bill, with the help of Mrs. Murray, exercising the Massachusetts citizens' right to free petition. Massachusetts being the last of the states to keep the right. I also meet with a psychology professor, who visits the state house weekly, and discuss the study of meta-physics, the conception growth, effect of ideas.

Inspired by the experience of working for Mrs. Murray, I ran for delegate for student government day and to my surprise, won.

Mrs. Murray really takes the time to explain every part of the legislative process step by step and the knowledge I've gained is truly priceless, to say the least.

I am so thankful to Mrs. Murray for making me feel so welcome, and for being so willing to help me in my endeavors. She is definitely an inspiration to me.

The Sunday School meets from 9:30-10:30 a.m. Children in grades K-8 are invited to attend.

Let your feelings be heard about the new harbor plan

Letters

To the Editor:

The people of Cohasset are blest by nature's gift of a beautiful harbor, but we suffer from the reality that it is too small. For over twenty years it has been packed to capacity of about 340 boats, with more than 180 on the waiting list to fill the few spots that become available each year. The inevitable disputes about who is next to fill an opening is running up legal costs to the taxpayers at a rate no one would have believed only a few years ago. Owners of unauthorized boats fight removal from the harbor in the courts, adding to the legal bills we must pay.

The solution is to increase the density of boats in the harbor. A floating town docking system with finger piers would allow boats to be clustered side by side with walkways to all boats and to the shore. It is a common solution to space problems in harbors all around the nation's coastline. In New England thousands of boats are kept at such systems at rental prices that boatowners are eager to pay to enjoy the water.

The proposed docking system for the Cove area of the harbor will increase the capacity of the harbor by about sixty boats. As a municipal enterprise it will become a significant profit center for the town. An area to provide the necessary shore support for access and parking has been legally set aside in a court agreement with the Yankee Oil Company, current owners of the old Cox estate. Everything is all set to go, right? Wrong.

The Zoning Board of Appeals must grant the Selectmen permission to put a parking area in the residential zone outlined in the agreement with Yankee Oil. Next Monday night, January 12, at 8 p.m. the selectmen will decide whether or not they want to make such a proposal to the seemingly obvious and beneficial solution to a major town problem.

Installing a float system in the Cove will inevitably require the rearrangement of about 12 to 15 boats currently occupying the area. Some of these boatowners are understandably unhappy about having to move from a spot they have occupied for years. Some are worried that they may be pushed out of the harbor. The turnover rate in the harbor is about fifteen boats each year however, and the new facility will increase the total number of boats by about sixty. So all boats currently moored in the harbor will stay in the harbor, but some rearrangement of boats around the facility will be necessary.

Three homes are across the street from the proposed parking area, and their owners are also understandably concerned about a parking lot across the street. There is a dense five foot high hedge as a shield for the parking area, however, and more plantings can be added to hide the parked cars. The proposal stresses the need for safe entrance and exit from the lot, as well as security gates and patrols to insure peace and quiet, both in the docking area and the parking area.

The Selectmen need to know both sides of any controversy. They have heard from those in opposition who will certainly be in attendance Monday night. It is important that those who favor the proposal also attend this meeting so that the Selectmen can be aware that many feel the idea is a solution to two major problems for the town. It is also important that the proposal not be killed before it has had an opportunity to be heard before the appropriate town boards, public hearings, and most important, to be presented to the voters in town meeting for their approval or disapproval.

Very truly yours,
Charles G. Fink,
former Harbor
Committee Chairman

Recreation offers dog obedience, sports programs

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer three levels of instruction for Dog Obedience Classes to be taught by Laurie Ann Cleveland.

All classes will be held at the GAR Hall, Scituate, and will begin Sunday evening, Jan. 11, 1987 Beginner class will be at 6:30 p.m., Sunday's.Intermediate/Advanced Class will be held at 7:30 p.m., Sunday's.

The purpose of beginner classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered are proper use of voice corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on ownership and responsibility will also be included. The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dogs in obedience. The Intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Recreation Department Beginner class.

For the above classes owners are required to have their dogs equiped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding 4 inches. Absolutely no spike collars are allowed!! It is strongly suggested that the handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for this session. For all classes: The fee is $25 per dog for the eight week, one hour per week program. Dogs should be a minimum of three months of age, and there is no maximum age.

To register, please call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791.

Game Time Program

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for a Game Time/After School Sports program for children in grades 3 through 5.

The fee for the program will be $10.00 per participant with a 50 percent discount offered for 2nd and subsequent children from the same family. The program conducted by Recreation Department staff will be held at the Deer Hill School gym, on Friday afternoons from 3:30 to 5 p.m., beginning Friday, January 30, continuing for six weeks.

To register please call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791. Class size will be limited and registrations will be accepted on a first-call-first enrolled basis.

Gymnastics programs at Community Center

Registration is being held at the Cohasset Community Center for January gymnastics classes.

All classes start January 5 and must be preregistered. Gymnastics classes will run for 10 weeks at a cost of $35 per class. These classes are kept small in order to ensure individual attention so it is important to register early. The office will be open this week only from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for registration purposes. The new class schedule is as follows.

School board will appeal MIAA's decision

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Cohasset School Committee is going to bat for Matthew Silvia, a Cohasset resident attending South Shore Vocational Technical School in Hanover.

The committee voted 4-1, Monday to appeal a decision by the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA), which denied Silvia's request to play sports for Cohasset High School teams, sports which are not offered at the school Silvia attends.

Mary Ellen Gallagher, principal at CHS, attended the MIAA hearing in Ashland Dec. 30.

When the MIAA ruled unanimously against the 9th grader's request, she told the committee, it explained that if one student were allowed to participate in sports at a school he does not attend, the doors would be open to a flood of similar requests.

Cohasset Assistant Superintendent Richard Streeter, who also attended the hearing added, a rule on this issue has been on the MIAA books for a number of years.

"Your next step," he told the committee, "is to appeal to the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Council (MIAC)."

Committee member Diana Kornet commented, "It's not like he's going to play for another town; he lives here. He's going to another town to attend school."

Secretary Barbara Bliss agreed.

"We're not stealing an athlete from another school, because they don't offer those sports at Votech," she said.

Chairman Joseph Nedrow noted, "Students who attend vocational schools in Quincy and Weymouth are allowed to play for the public schools in those towns. The vocational program is a special program, which is not available in our school to students who live here.

"We're part of a consortium here, because of our size," he explained. "That makes their decision even more unfair. Perhaps the best way to plead this case is to tell them it's tough enough as a small school."

Nedrow added, "As an old football player, I'd say we need a multiple offense. We need to appeal the decision and we need to try to change the rule."

Even though she and Streeter emphasized the fact that South Shore Vocational Technical School does not offer the three sports in which Silvia wants to compete, Gallagher told the board, the MIAA said it feels it is important for students to take part in sports at the school the student attends.

Committee member Richard Conley cast the lone dissenting vote in the school committee's 4-1 decision to appeal.

"I guess I'm the only one to stay off the white horse," he said, "but I think the MIAA is made up of a bunch of sensible people."

He explained, "They take away the emotion from what for us are emotional issues. It was a unanimous decision; if they were divided, maybe it would be different.

"We have enough to do without taking on something else," he added. "We have to look and see why the MIAA made this rule. I have nothing against this young man.

"But say for example you're a soccer coach at that school in Hanover," Conley argued, "and you have kids going off to play football in Cohasset; that hurts your soccer program in Hanover."

He added, there could be problems regarding the eligibility of athletes.

"The grades between the school systems are unequal," he said. "Kids in Cohasset have to work harder to qualify."

Student representative Michele Casolaro agreed with Conley.

"He made the choice to go to Votech," she told the committee, "and he shouldn't be allowed to play here. If I wanted to play lacrosse at Votech, I would not be allowed to do so."

Cohasset kids aren't alienated because they can't play sports here, she added, but they might be alienated if they come in and take the spots of Cohasset High School students on the teams."

Cohasset Superintendent Stephen Hart commented, "There is something to be said about being part of the vocational school community; they have dances, clubs and sports there just like we do.

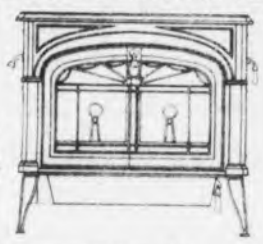
"If this appeal is accomplished," he added, "it will be difficult to handle logistically, with regard to eligibility and transportation and so forth. It wouldn't open any doors, because this is a special case.

"I'm not optimistic about a positive response from the MIAA," Hart said, "but I believe we have the obligation to pursue it."

Free recital at Conservatory

The South Shore Conservatory of Music will present a joint faculty recital by trombonist A. Douglas Wauchope and pianist Margarita Gurevich at 8 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 10, in Cox Hall at the Conservatory, off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham.

The program will include music of Bach, Schumann, and Mozart, with faculty members David Cross, Ellen Donohue-Saltman, and Michelle Vigneau assisting in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn, and Bassoon. Admission is free and the public is welcome.



A Douglas Wauchope, a resident of Rockland, holds a Master of Music degree from the New England Conservatory and has taught at the South Shore Conservatory since 1970. He also serves as a conductor in the Conservatory's Summer Wind Ensemble program, and plays trombone on a free-lance basis with numerous New England ensembles, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Pops, the Boston Opera Company, and the Boston Ballet.

Margarita Gurevich teaches piano at all three branches of the South Shore Conservatory. A native of Russia, Gurevich studied and taught in Leningrad before coming to the United States; she gave award-winning performances through the USSR as a soloist, accompanist, and chamber player. Gurevich now resides in Stoughton, and performs frequently in the Boston area.

Proposed school budget shows hike

Superintendent Stephen Hart presented a preliminary budget Monday, to the Cohasset School Committee.

The budget calls for an overall increase of about eight percent, from $4,492,126 to $4,855,710.

The largest percentage of the budget, 73 percent, will be devoted to instruction, he noted.

The price tag for Cohasset instruction is up $244,976, from $3,300,419 to $3,545,395.

Administrative costs are up $17,429, from $229,192 to $246,621.

Other school services registered a preliminary increase of $18,169, from $308,140 to $326,309.

The cost of operations is up $35,119, from $494,517 to $529,636.

The budget for programs with other schools showed an increase of $25,310, from $128,024 to $153,334.

Capital outlay costs for new items to be purchased, showed a budget increase of $25,981, from $23,834 to $49,815.

Fixed costs was the only budget category presented by the superintendent which showed a decrease. $8,000 was required last fiscal year, but the budget calls for only $4,600 in fixed costs for fiscal year 1988.

Of the total budget increase, Hart said, about 80 percent went toward salary hikes, for teachers as well as custodians, bus drivers and administrators.

"The budget has been pretty consistent over the past three or four years," he noted, "except for fixed expenditures and capital outlay.

"This preliminary budget has not yet been deliberated on by the school committee," he added, "but I think this is a realistic budget."

Across the school district, Hart said he foresees a substantial increase in special needs costs, mostly for tuition.

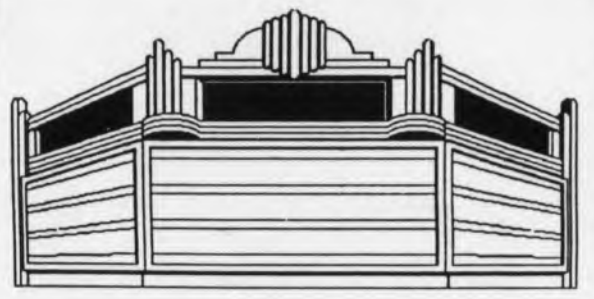
The elementary schools will spend $4,500 for a new reading text. "This will help coordinate the elementary reading program," he said. "It's not as coordinated as it could be."

Meanwhile, the librarians have complained, the school committee is not spending enough money per pupil on library supplies.

"They have requested doubling the amount, $7,000. Hart said. "That is a substantial investment, but I feel it is one we have to look at seriously."

In response to state assessment scores, the preliminary budget offers an increase of one percent of the total, for reading and language arts.

Hart explained, the $4,500 stipend would aid the development of a resource room, complete with hardware and software for word processing.



The budget offers $13,000 for various departments to purchase new texts, an ongoing program, Hart said.

All the money will not go directly toward reading, writing and arithmetic. About $25,000 will be spent on physical improvements to the school buildings, for things such as replacing gym doors and ceiling tiles.

The committee will review individual school budgets, beginning with the Osgood School, Jan. 26.

Girls' Basketball

The girls picked up their fourth consecutive Christmas tournament championship this vacation and fulfilled their first goal of the season. The first obstacle to the championship was Blue Hills, the same team that knocked the Skippers out of the tournament last year. In this game, Cohasset proved that victory is sweet but revenge is sweeter by beating Blue Hills decisively 78-41.

Coach Bill Fallon was very pleased with the way his team played and cited Cindy Spooner, Margie Murphy, and Maureen O'Leary as the leaders on offense. Fallon also praised the efforts of Melissa Shea who totally dominated the boards and played tremendous defense.

The girls clinched the championship by crushing Scituate by a devastating score of 52-12. Fallon felt the key to this victory was his team's strong intensity on defense. Fallon called this one of the best defensive games he has ever seen a Cohasset team play.

Overall, the Skippers totally dominated the tournament as well as dominating the tournament all star team. Margie Murphy, Maureen O'Leary, and Sarah Dickerman all made the all star tournament team. Cindy Spooner, who has been playing brilliantly all year, was named the tournament's most valuable player.

This week the girls travel to Rockland and face a tough challenge. Friday, the Skippers play a much improved East Bridgewater away.

Hockey

For the first time in about four years, the boys won the annual Lobster Pot tournament by blowing past Scituate 5-0. After an inspirational win over Marshfield that propelled Cohasset into the championship game of the tournament, the Skippers dominated the game allowing few scoring opportunities for Scituate and capitalizing on every scoring opportunity of their own. Coach Dennis Walsh was very pleased with the win and was especially proud of the boys. Walsh said this victory was the result of an entire team effort.

Jeff Hartwell led the offense with two goals. Craig Mulcahy and Todd Henry both turned in excellent efforts for Cohasset on defense. Goalie Pete Sandblom had a good game in net and earned the shutout.

Saturday, the boys hung tough and managed to pull out a tie with Duxbury 4-4. Cohasset held its own against a talented Duxbury team and found itself playing evenly with the Dragons even though Duxbury played one more line than the Skippers. Walsh was once again impressed with his team's effort and felt the boys will definitely beat Duxbury the next time they play them.

Walsh was happy with the way Danny Pompeo and Craig Mulcahy played. Returning from injuries, Philip Mahoney and Mike Anderson both turned in good efforts for Cohasset.

Cohasset's overall record stands now at 5-2-1. With two of their weaker opponents coming up this week, the Skippers could find themselves with an impressive record of 7-2-1 which would leave them in a very promising position in the league standings. Walsh feels that if Cohasset beats Scituate and Hull this week the team has a very good chance of making the state tournament.

Wrestling

After opening with an impressive victory over Norwell, the boys faced two tough teams Quincy and Randolph in a tri-meet over vacation. Cohasset first wrestled against Quincy and pulled off an upset victory. Coach Torin Sweeney was pleased with his team's effort in this win and felt all the boys wrestled well. However, there was still even more unexpected success for Cohasset that day as the boys pulled out an even more amazing victory over Randolph. This win was especially impressive considering Cohasset had to wrestle two meets in a row, was suffering from much fatigue, and had to face an even tougher team than Quincy. Despite the odds, the boys came through with the win and according to Sweeney, "took a big step for wrestling in Cohasset," for the Skippers' record now stands at 3-0 for the first time in the history of wrestling at Cohasset.

Captains Liam Stanford and Glen Froio won both their matches along with Doug Bennet, Peter Buckley, and rookie Tim Ferotti. Mat Fitzpatrick and John Rhodes came away with victories as well as Mat Deveny who pinned his opponent in a mere 29 seconds and Patrick O'Connor who was cited by Sweeney as showing a lot of improvement this season. Dennis Mulligan, Jim Donahue, and Paul Froio all wrestled well for Cohasset as well.

The boys also participated in a Christmas tournament in Marshfield in which 15 teams took part from around the South Shore. The Skippers did very well in the tournament and ended up sixth overall.

Liam Stanford who was the only returning champion from last year repeated his great performance and once again placed first in his weight class. Junior Doug Bennet also dominated his weight division and walked away a champion. Glen Froio came in second in his division after only losing to a returning state champion.

Wednesday, the Skippers face yet another challenge when they wrestle against Scituate. A victory here would give Cohasset a very good shot at winning the league title. Sweeney is very very optimistic about this meet and feels Cohasset has a great chance at coming out on top.

More victories . . .

beginning of the year has improved tremendously, said Minelli.

The Cruisers begin the road back to Division III supremacy with games within the next 10 days with Rockland, East Bridgewater and Hull. "We're like the Celtics now. Everyone is gunning for us and act like they have just won the Superbowl if they come close." said Minelli.

Incidentally, Eddie and the Cruisers were featured in a New England regional hoop magazine for high school athletics in 1986. The magazine published a Cohasset Mariner photograph of last year's squad lined up against an old car. Can the Cruisers bounce back despite this loss?

"These kids are out to make their own legacy. They are excited in a different way from last year's team. I think right now they are the number one small high school team in New England," said Minelli.

Jeff Bettinger looks back on a town. . .

that can operate within the wetlands area."

The committee was also interested in establishing a hazardous materials bylaw town wide, but even more restrictive within the watershed.

It established a regulation, which called for the testing of underground storage tanks, even at gas stations not within the watershed.

"The testing of the tanks was the most controversial aspect of the bylaw," Bettinger noted, "most would agree it was also the most important aspect.

"We found in our research," he said, "the average life of a storage tank, based on Cohasset's soil conditions, is 13 to 15 years before a tank or a pipe will rust through."

Bettinger and his wife, Nancy, did the preparation work. They went to the town clerk's office, where storage tanks are registered, wrote down the addresses, and drove around Cohasset, pinpointing the tank locations on a map.

"We covered every corner of Cohasset," he said. "And we found that some of these tanks were more than 30 years old. I'm not saying they definitely leak, but there is a higher potential a leak could occur from an older tank."

"Nobody likes to spend money," he said, "especially in Cohasset. But nobody likes to pay for insurance either, and that's what this is."

The committee had finished its research and was prepared for Town Meeting.

"Because of an unrelated matter at an earlier meeting regarding sewers," he said, "someone objected to letting our consultants speak. That was embarrassing, quite frankly. We had asked these people to come down.

"I was floored," he added, "because I had to give the technical presentation, too."

The new regulations passed overwhelmingly.

"There's not much of a constituancy for dirty water," Bettinger quipped, "or for pollution."

With the regulations passed, it was not long before he found a new challenge.

"After the phone stopped ringing and I had been free for about a week, I wanted to get involved again."

Bettinger was appointed to fill a vacancy on the conservation commission.

"I enjoyed that," he said. "Everything I had been involved in in Cohasset before that was sort of the first of its kind; here, everything was defined by state law. It was refreshing."

In his six months of service on the commission, Bettinger not only reviewed plans for development, but got involved in writing letters to the secretary of environmental affairs, James Hoyt.

The Cohasset Heights landfill had submitted an environmental notification form to Hoyt, for approval of its 20-acre Phase 4 expansion.

"The state granted them a permit, saying that an environmental impact study was not required," Bettinger noted. "The conservation commission, along with most other boards in town vehemently disagreed, and several letters were sent.

"It burns me," he added. "The state got our letters and never responded to our concerns. They just approved it."

Because of his interest and involvement in town affairs, many might have thought Bettinger was a lifelong resident of Cohasset, but he lived here only four-and-a-half years.

Former Cohasset resident Jeff Bettinger stands alongside a momento he brought along, a primitive painting of the Common. (John Magadieu)

The young engineer and his wife moved from Michigan to Cohasset in June, 1982. His first volunteer effort here was with the hazardous materials advisory committee.

He helped orchestrate a clean up day in 1984. Thirty 55 gallon drums of hazardous materials were collected. "It was a great success," he said.

"Probably the main reason we first got involved," he said, "was because we didn't know anybody; you meet people when you get involved."

Recently, the Bettingers left the apartment they were renting in Cohasset and bought a house they could afford, in Weymouth.

Over the fireplace, there hangs a painting of Cohasset harbor.

"I still have ties to Cohasset," he said. "I'm treasurer of the sailing club. If the trustees allow me to, I will continue to do that for another year.

"I will be back on summer weekends," he added, "crewing a Flying Scot with Bob Jackson."

He said he hopes to return permanently to Cohasset someday.

"I really like the town," he explained. "In the ten years I've been living independent of my parents, it's the first place I've lived that I felt was home.

"I would have loved to stay there," he said, "but we couldn't afford to buy a house; we looked for a year.

"Goodness knows, I put a lot of work into making it a better place to live," he added. "At least I think so."

As to whether he will work as a volunteer in Weymouth, Bettinger commented, "I have to build a deck and paint my house first, but I probably will get antsy and get involved."

Officials confer about private landfill. . .

of the commercial dump by about two years.

According to water commissioner Ronald Goodwin, who attended the lengthy morning meeting, a CHL engineer proposed the construction of a one-of-a-kind groundwater treatment plant at the site. He claimed the technology would work, Goodwin stated, although there are no such treatment plants anywhere else in the world.

According to Goodwin, Sen. Golden claimed that the treatment plant is "untested technology," and requested a copy of the landfill's liability insurance policy. The request was rejected by Atty. Moehrke.

According to water commissioner Ronald Goodwin, and official from the state Department of Air Quality Control said they are aware of the situation and "indications are they will be monitoring" the problem for the town.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. IX, No. 16 | 383-6731/545-7060 | Thursday, January 15, 1987 | 2 Sections | 35 cents

Officials say no to marina plans

Official action on the proposed harbor marina has been grounded.

Selectmen voted 3-1 Monday night not to allow the pier proposal to proceed to the zoning board of appeals.

On an informal, informational basis, the harbor study committee will meet next with the zoning enforcement officer. The committee will likely return to selectmen with more definitive plans within a few weeks, once again requesting permission to proceed.

Fritz Pfaffmann and Charles Fink of the harbor study committee presented the plan for a 72-boat finger slip marina in Cohasset harbor, but they were met with resistance from residents of the neighborhood, and from a contingent of Cohasset fishermen.

According to the preliminary plan Pfaffmann and Fink presented, Cohasset would lease a 215-foot lot for parking adjacent to the Yankee Oil Company on Margin Street. The new lot would accommodate 42 cars and would be shared between boat owners and the company.

"What's going to happen when we have to give this land back to Yankee Oil in 2008?" queried Selectman James Gallagher.

"We have to take this step by step," Pfaffmann commented. "We might then talk about taking that land by eminent domain."

Commission looks to private operator for sewer plant

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The sewer commission will decide next week whether to "take the town out of the sewer treatment business" and hire a private contracting service to operate the waste water treatment plant.

Sewer commissioner Edward Guild said the concept was an idea he originally proposed about two or three months ago. The proposal was implemented on an interim emergency basis in late December when the commission experienced a "crisis" when the plant was left without a certified supervisor.

Since that time, the town has retained York Water Consultants (YWC) to operate the plant. Manuel Salvador, the town's sewer plant supervisor for the past 16 years, has been suspended with pay by the commission, pending a closed meeting Jan. 27.

Commissioner Guild reiterated that the board's possible action next week to hire the contract company is not related to the commission's decision Dec. 31 to suspend Salvador.

"Ted and Gary (Vanderweil) believe the issues are not inter-related. They just believe YWC can do better for less," commissioner Charles DeSantis said Monday night.

After 138 years, it remains a 'basic' store

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

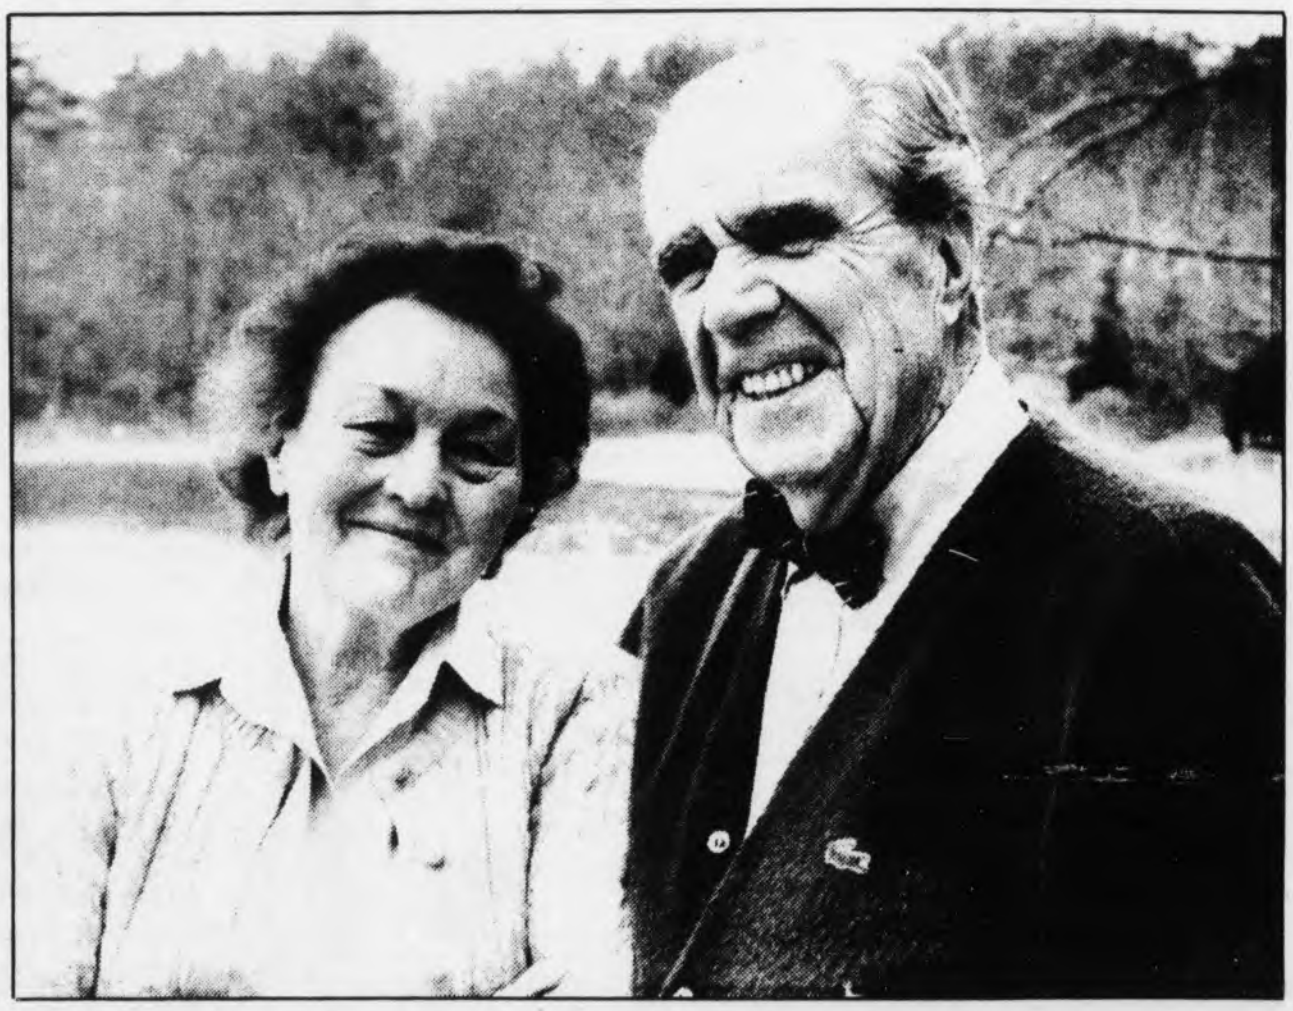
It has weathered time and withstood the bright lights of Hollywood; the Cohasset Hardware store is an enduring local landmark.

In 1849, Samuel Bates located his tin shop at the corner of Elm and Main streets. Eight years later, his son, Allen Collier Bates established the Cohasset Hardware store there.

William H. McGaw, the local carpenter who donated the Captain John Wilson House to the historical society and built the roller coaster at Nantasket, bought the shop in 1912 and it has been in the family ever since.

The store was run for a while by Helen S. Collier and Robert Collier, until Louis and Helen Watson of 101 Border Street took the reins. They have worked since 1966, to maintain their family business in Cohasset village.

"I was with General Motors for 16 years," Louis recalled. "I operated a Chevrolet dealership. But I decided to get out of it and go into the hardware business 20 years ago."



When the Watsons took over, they made some changes to the store. Cohasset Hardware has survived and thrived through a lot of changes.

"We took out the old oak drawers," Helen said, "and we remodeled. Of course, we kept the ladders with the wheels on them. But we had to upgrade the lighting. That building has a personality of its own."

A photo of the old tin shop shows a rectangular building fronted by trees and a dirt road.

Louis noted, the shop now is managed by their son Jim and their daughter Tina, who transformed the upper floor into a pottery loft and summer-furniture gallery.

Cohasset's week . . .

Bylaw review

Building inspector Donald Robbins Thursday suggested a bylaw change to the zoning board of appeals.

According to Robbins, the voters at Cohasset Town Meeting should be asked to amend "one of the most restrictive bylaws on the South Shore."

At present, the bylaw in question requires anyone who wants to alter a non-conforming structure, to pay $75 and appear before the appeals board for a special permit.

Developers must comply whether or not the proposed alteration increases the non-conformity of their building.

"It's a royal pain in the neck to a lot of people," Robbins said.

One or two come before the board each month seeking to expand a non-conforming structure without increasing the non-conformity, he noted. "I'm holding these people up, and they get mad at me."

Robbins added, "the zoning board doesn't need the hassle either; these things clutter up the agenda."

Board member Barbara Power said the ZBA will relay Robbins' suggestion to the planning board, which is in charge of Cohasset's bylaws.

The planning board will decide whether or not to put an article on the April Town Meeting warrant, calling for an amendment.

"It's a minor nuisance," Power said.

Asked why such an amendment had not been sought previously, she commented, "I think sometimes in the past, the former building inspector, who served as the zoning officer simply ignored it.

"We have had more of these incidents in the past three months," she said, "than in the previous couple of years. This is because the bylaw is being more literally enforced by the new zoning officer (Robbins), as is proper."

Open burning permits available

Permits for open burning during 1987 are now available at the Cohasset Fire Department headquarters on Elm Street. The burning season began Jan. 15 and ends May 1.

Permits may be obtained daily at the fire department. The hours of burning are restricted to 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The decision whether to allow burning will be made on a daily basis, based on the weather conditions.

Residents are cautioned to burn at least 75 feet away from any building or structure. Leaves or tree stumps may not be burned, but must be disposed of in another manner.

Fires must be attended at all times, the fire department recommends having a hose available while you are burning the debris.

For additional information, please contact the non-emergency telephone number for the Cohasset Fire Department, 383-0616.

All burning permit calls should be referred to Fire Prevention Officer, Mark Trask.

A ponding problem

Daniel Cotton of 27 King Street recently notified the conservation commission that flooding in the basement of his home has increased. He believes it is caused by the restrictive drainage from nearby Great Swamp.

In a letter to the commission, Cotton stated that the heavy rains of recent weeks has caused ponding on the south side of his property which drains into Great Swamp, west of King Street. There is also ponding on the north side of the property and is taking longer than anticipated to drain.

The King Street resident requested the commission clear the drains and culverts "to restore Great Swamp to the conditions that existed on or before the April 19, 1981 Topographical Survey, except as permits may have been issued to change them."

Step raise question

The advisory committee tripped over a couple of stumbling blocks on their way to review departmental budgets Tuesday.

First, their office door was locked and no one at Town Hall had the key. Behind the door lay a number of budgets waiting to be reviewed.

The advisors, undaunted, found another room and prepared to look through the figures they had on hand.

Chairman Fred Koed presented another dilemma.

"According to the town accountant," he said, "everybody is getting a step-raise this year, plus a cost-of-living increase. But I don't remember that everyone gets the whole nine yards..."

The committee recalled the Caleb Marsh personnel study and queried whether the step-raises were instead tied to merit.

The question was left up in the air, to await an explanation from the town accountant at the advisors' next meeting, Jan. 20.

The committee went on to peruse and approve mostly level-funded expense accounts from the myriad of municipal departments, from civil defense to the shellfish constable.Of note, the committee voted 4-1-1 in favor of a $600 appropriation for celebrations requested for the Veterans of Foreign Wars by the selectmen.

The selectmen will spend the appropriation, if passed by Town Meeting, to reimburse the local VFW post for its expenses in memorial celebrations.

Although none of the committee members were gung ho for the appropriation, only Arne Gjesteby dissented.

"If the town wants to spend this money, it should pass a special article at Town Meeting," he argued. "People won't know they're spending that money if it is hidden in the budget. Next year, they could come back with a request for $3,000."

Koed commented, "I want to caution everybody against voting against apple pie."

Jane Goedecke agreed. "There's no way this will not pass at Town Meeting, and it's not worth fighting. It's not a large amount of money."

Plans reviewed for consultant . . .

YWC is currently operating the town's sewer treatment plant in Salvador's absence. The town is paying YWC $1,000 a week to operate the plant in addition to Salvador's salary.

The contract proposed by YWC would cost the town $8,750 from now until June 30. After that period has expired, YWC division president Thomas Brown said that a five-year contract would be presented to the commission for an annual total of $115,000 compared to a proposed sewer department budget for Fiscal Year 1988 of $135,000.

"Ninety percent of my contracts are for five years. That's the whole objective of my business," Brown told the commission, "to work for you a long time. I'm not interested in five months. I'm interested in the long haul."

The commissioners said they are looking into whether this five-month contract proposal needs the approval of town meeting. "We've asked town counsel for advice on this, but we doubt we have to go before town meeting," DeSantis said. "We think we can just take the money from our operating budget until the end of June." The chairman noted that if the board votes to go ahead with the five-month contract with YWC, they will have money available within the current operating budget to fund the proposal.

But if they decide to reject the contract, the budget line item currently being used to fund the contract services will be depleted and the commission will request a reserve fund transfer to fund YWC at least until the personnel matter with Salvador is settled.

After hearing the presentation from YWC president Brown Monday night, the commission took the five-month contract proposal under advisement.

"This has been my interest for the past two or three months," commissioner Guild stated. "It was fortuitous that I talked to these people and corresponded with them. In our time of crisis, I talked to Hull but they didn't get back to me and YWC got back right away. This was an independent project of mine, and we had agreed tentatively to meet with them in January. These people have a remarkable record in improving waste water treatment plants. I talked to four references and what they said was fantastic."

The commissioner said the company's performance since they began work in Cohasset in late December has been "unbelievable. There's a great advantage to relying on an organization as an on-going entity rather than an individual," Guild stated.

In his presentation to the commission, YWC president Brown explained that the plant will be manned by a minimum staff of 1 1/2 operators for a total of 60 hours a week. If the need arises, such as the time when the Cohasset plant was left unsupervised on Dec. 22, additional certified operators will be brought in on an emergency basis.

In its proposal to the town, YWC suggested that the town's current assistant chief operator is a "potential transfer" to YWC.

Commissioner Vanderweil recommended that if an agreement was struck with YWC, the company provide the board with time sheets and the hours of staffing. "Once we have a contract with you," he said, "then it's in your best interest to reduce your attendance, the amount of chemicals and to maintain a fixed fee which will lower the cost to you and give you more of a profit. That's the opposite of what we want. That won't bother me for three or five months, but if this contract was ever extended, I don't think it will be saving the town a lot."

Vanderweil suggested that the staffing personnel requirements by the town be spelled out in a contract with YWC and that weekly time sheets be submitted to the commission for its review. He also suggested that copies of all bills paid for the repair and maintenance of the plant be submitted to the commission "so if YWC ever stops here, we know where to resume."

According to YWC president Brown, the company has multi-year contracts with six Massachusetts communities and with 70 towns and cities throughout the northeast to run their municipal waste water treatment plants.

The commissioners noted that town meeting must approve annual contracts with the contracting firm. If the commission decided to enter into a five-year contract after June 30, town meeting would approve funding of that contract each year in article four of the warrant.

"So that's our escape clause on this contract," DeSantis said. "We may be out of the sewer business in two or four years, (if the sewer connection with Hull is ever approved and completed) so we would review this funding authorization at the end of each fiscal year."

$2,500 town cemetery study included in TM warrant

Selectmen voted unanimously Monday to include an article on the April Town Meeting warrant which would provide $2,500 to research the expansion of town cemeteries.

Glenn Pratt told the board, Cohasset currently has about 360 available gravesites remaining at Woodside and Beechwood cemeteries, enough to last three to five years.

At Woodside, 160 plots are still for sale, Pratt said. However, Beechwood cemetery is not well-defined, because records have not been kept current.

Pratt went before the selectmen "to get the ball rolling," regarding the acquisition of more burial grounds.

A stop-gap measure at Woodside could pick up 60 more graves at the rear of the cemetery, he said. But while only two of four acres has been developed at Beechwood, much of the town-owned land there is under water.

"Do we need to go for a whole new parcel?" Chairman Diane Sullivan asked.

"We can't expand our present facilities into the watershed," Pratt noted. "The state can grant the expansion of existing cemeteries in watershed areas, but even if we got permission to expand, there is a problem of health concerns when cemeteries are near the watershed.

"Studies have shown that the cement vault which contains the caskets dissolves after 80 to 100 years," he said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle suggested, "We should endorse the $2,500 article for research. Two long-time residents died recently and there are more people moving into town every day." His cohorts agreed and the board voted to install the article.

Pratt commented, "If there is a land-taking and site development, this will be a substantial project and three years is a very short time."

In an unrelated matter regarding Central Cemetery, Dan Cotton argued against allowing the telephone company to install a conduit at the corner of Joy Place and North Main Street.

"I'm concerned about maintaining what is probably the oldest historical landmark in town," Cotton said. "Many of Cohasset's first citizens are buried there."

He added, "The phone company has been a good neighbor, but I don't want them to put their conduit there. It would be an anachronism in front of that ancient burying ground."

Selectman James Gallagher noted, "Last week, I spoke against the telephone company's location of the conduit there. It's on a hill and it's a dangerous curve. That location is totally inappropriate."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle, an Edison lineman argued, "They put shrubs around these things; I think the way they care for them is excellent. Now, they like to bury them, rather than put them overhead.

"I don't want the cemetery disturbed," he said, "but I think where it's going to go now, if we let it come in, it's the best spot."

Gallagher disagreed. "I won't support it. We shouldn't put it in front of a historic place; we have to protect our landmarks."

Cotton commented, "There's a beautiful, ancient wrought iron fence there; I would like it to show, not to have it covered by shrubs."

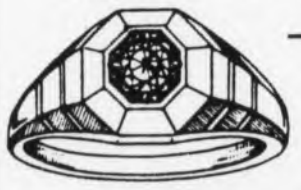
Chairman Diane Sullivan noted, not all of the cemetery's abutters were notified of the hearing on this matter. Selectmen will discuss the issue of the cemetery and the conduit at their next meeting, Feb. 2.

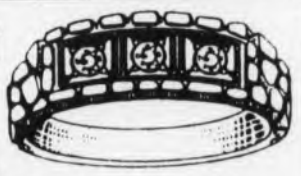
Troop 28 to host Boy Scout Klondike Derby

Cohasset's Troop 28 will be hosting the Klondike Derby. The Derby will be held in Wheelwright Park, off North Main Street in Cohasset on Jan. 17. Those Troops who are hardy and wish to stay the weekend may do so. There will be an area provided from Friday, Jan. 16, until Sunday, Jan. 18. There will be water available in the form of a hand pump. All troops must provide their own tents, as there are no cabins or wooden shelters. There will be no vehicles allowed in the camping area. The hike to the camping area is between a half and 3/4 miles long.

The Troop 28 will provide hot coffee for the adults and hot chocolate for the Scouts on Saturday only between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. There is a pond in the area, which will be available for skating. Those who wish could have a Sat. night skating party.

The Klondike itself will have eight stations. They will consist of: the sled and proper equipment, first aid, orienteering, fire starting, shelter, knot tieing, sneak and capture, and signaling (Morse or semaphore). At each station the Patrols and Webelo Dens will be given points for TEAM WORK, SCOUT SPIRIT, TIME, CLEAN UP, AND UNIQUENESS OF SLED.





The winning Patrols will receive a trophy and the winning Troop will receive the trophy, which will be passed on to the winning Troop each year. Last year Troop 22 from Whitman won it.

The Klondike Derby is offered to the ten towns in the Old Mills District for their Boy Scouts and Webelos groups. For further information call Merle Brown at 383-1625. (Other Districts will be holding their Klondike Derbys this month too). The purpose of the Klondike is designed to provide an opportunity for all Scouts to use their Scout Skills and to have some fun doing so.

The Klondike Derby will begin Jan. 17, Saturday from 9 a.m. until 3-3:30 p.m.

The cost per Scout will be $2 to cover the cost of the pie for the District patch, hot chocolate and coffee.

Feds tighten flood insurance claims

Federal flood insurance policyholders may be a bit out of luck this time around.

Most of the 578 claims (filed by Monday afternoon) from South Shore victims of the Jan. 2, coastal storm reported basement flood damage, and even with contents coverage, most things people keep in the basement will not be allowed.

Tom Gann, New England regional manager of the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) in Braintree, said, "There is a limitation of coverage in the basement area. Since October 1983 we have not covered basement contents with some exceptions, such as hot water heaters, washers and dryers, freezers, air-conditioners and furnaces."

What isn't covered are the wall-to-wall carpets, Christmas decorations, couches, tools, ping-pong tables and the other traditional basement items.

A basement, Gann said, is defined as any space with a below-ground-level floor on all four sides. A space with three walls that extend below ground level and a fourth that adjoins a ground-level garage, for example would not be classified as a basement.

Gann said, nevertheless, he expects between $3 million and $6 million would be paid back in claims averaging between $5,000 and $10,000 apiece. Average pay-back time is between 60 and 90 days, he said.

The amount of structural damage so far reported, Gann said, "is much less than in 1978," although some policyholders were reporting damage to decks and porches.

A temporary claims office will be opened "as soon as we find a location," Gann reported. He advised policyholders to file claims with their insurance agents, noting that the regional office was staffed by only three people.

"Right now we're looking for space in Braintree, and as soon as we find it we'll bring in six staff members from Washington and their computers," he said.

Marshfield and Scituate residents account for about 40 percent of the total claims filed. Cohasset and Hingham policyholders have filed only 15 claims, and Hull and Quincy residents account for the rest. Hull was the hardest hit community, Gann said.

Most local policyholders pay about $300 for an estimated $75,000 worth of coverage for structure and contents. Of that value, $10,000 is usually for contents. Policyholders must specify that they want contents coverage; otherwise, they are out of luck. Rates for structure coverage begin at $3.50 per $1,000 of value for $35,000 worth of coverage and then diminish. Contents coverage costs $5.50 per $1,000 of value.

"Reputable agents will explain the conditions of the policy," Gann said.

A small sampling of local agents indicated that since the federal program was implemented in the early 1970's, private flood insurance is not sold. Gann said the program is federally subsidized and has paid for itself only twice since it began.

Since the blizzard of 1978, the number of federally insured Massachusetts residents has nearly doubled, Gann reported. Before the '78 storm, 13,000 policies were carried in the commonwealth; 25,000 residents are now covered by the federal flood program.

The number of people filing claims arising from the New Year northeaster is only a small percentage of residents who are covered: NFIP lists 775 policyholders in Marshfield, 1,125 in Scituate, 85 in Hingham, 96 in Cohasset, 1,250 in Hull and 950 in Quincy.

Gann said a policyholder's call to an agent should result in prompt action from the Braintree office. Federal staff members assign adjusters in events of this magnitude, he explained.

Local residents may contact the federal branch office of the National Flood Insurance Program in Braintree for further assistance.

Cohasset prepares for U.S. Constitution's bicentennial

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Cohasset has become one of the first communities on the South Shore to be designated an official U.S. Constitution Bicentennial town.

An official committee has been formed, lead by chairman David Wadsworth. In his own words, the committee is not looking to set the town ablaze with festive celebrations. Rather, the committee is looking toward a year-long observance of what Wadsworth termed, "one of the most remarkable documents in the history of this country."

Cohasset's Constitutional committee was formed in October; seven members selected by the board of selectmen. Since that time, Wadsworth has applied for and was recently granted official designation as a U.S. Constitution Bicentennial Committee.

The purpose of the committee, according to its chairman, "is to make all citizens aware of the importance and significance of the Constitution as the founding document of our nation and to coordinate activities in observance of the Constitution in our community."

Letters were sent from the committee to local businesses and organizations requesting their input and suggestions into ways in which the town should observe this 200th anniversary celebration.

According to Wadsworth, one response came from Edward Sheehan, director of the junior-senior high school social studies department. In his response, Sheehan noted that the tenth grade will be studying the background of the writing and content of the Constitution. The eighth grade will participate in an essay contest sponsored by the DAR. And, as part of a collaborative with the University of Massachusetts, Sheehan hopes to have visiting professors lecture on document and its significance in U.S. history.

"I wouldn't say we've had a great initial response from this first inquiry," Wadsworth stated. "But I feel there's interest and support about what the committee is doing, and a willingness to help."

The chairman and his committee will be presenting a resolution to town meeting in April honoring the Sept. 17, 1787 signing of the Constitution in Philadelphia. The committee also plans to use the Mariner "as a means of getting the word out through regular articles regarding the Constitution and how it actually came to be," he explained.

"We hope to encourage organizations to observe the Bicentennial in an appropriate way, something that's an on-going thing. Hopefully we can have an observance that will last until the 'big day' on Sept. 17," Wadsworth continued. "We're not really planning anything specific yet. The extent to which this town participates in the Bicentennial is really up to the individuals and organizations. This committee will act as the coordinator of all requests from the community and we have the background information if anyone needs it."

Among the other community observances during the year will be a special exhibit to be developed at the Historical Society's two summer museums. The library will participate, Wadsworth noted, through a special book collection funded through the National Endowment for the Humanities. The collection will include books regarding the Constitution and its importance in the history of our nation.

"I'm not sure why Cohasset has been so eager to become involved in this celebration, but we have," Wadsworth noted."

As the historical society's curator, Wadsworth has been keenly interested in the Constitution and how it came to be. "The delegates gathered in Philadelphia," he explained, "from every state except Rhode Island during the summer of 1787. It was written then during the convention by the delegates and signed by a majority, except for the leading delegate from Massachusetts.

"The Articles of Confederation were developed for loosely-knit sovereign states, but by 1786 they were headed for trouble. It was agreed by most of the political leaders of that time that the Articles must be replaced by a stronger document. That's the reason for the Constitution. It was an experiment, unique in that it was drawn up to solve the problems of those times but it still exists. This is really an amazing document when you consider the intelligence and ability of the people who were there to create it. This document has withstood two centuries. Through all the changing times it has remained constant."

Wadsworth, an obvious enthusiast of the U. S. Constitution, summed up the national celebration. "We're marking the production of a remarkable document - no matter which way we look at it,"

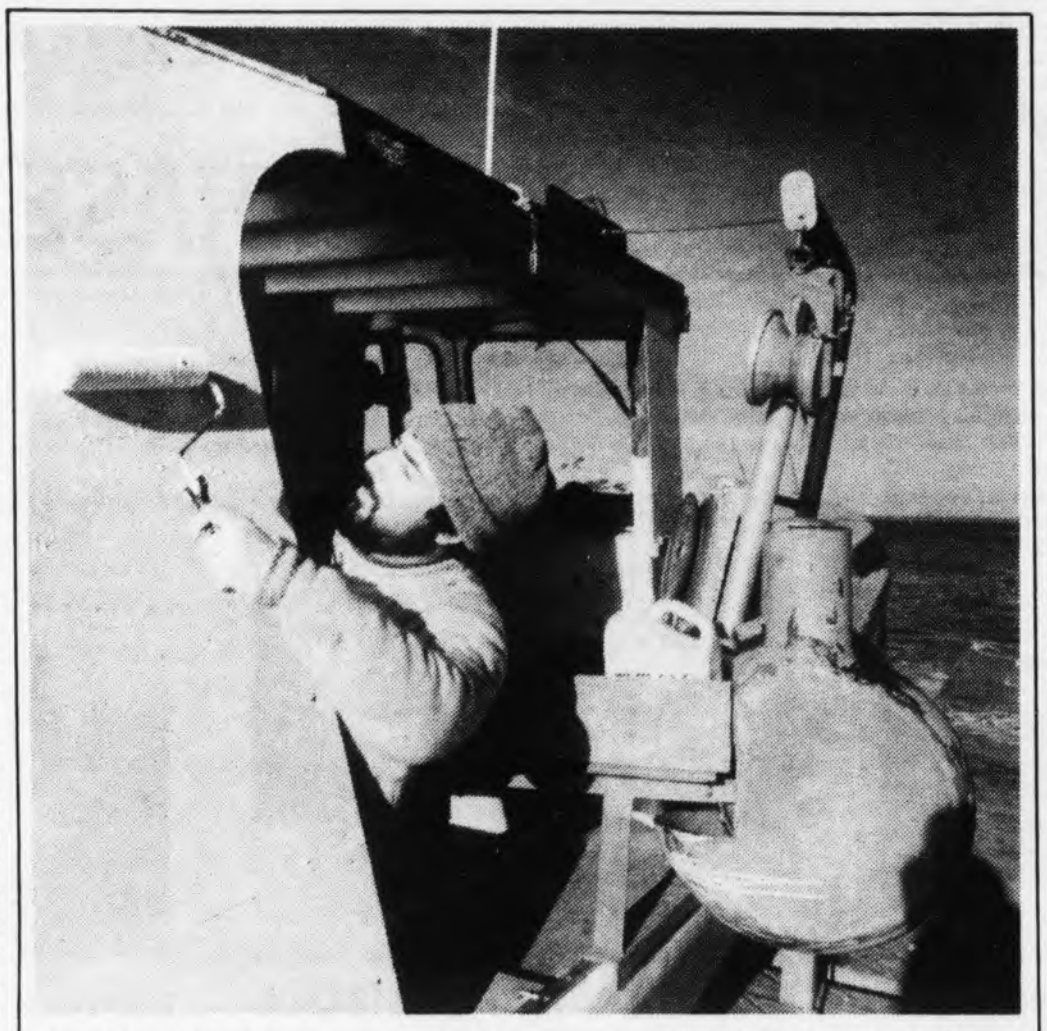
around town

☐ Had a note from the Cohasset Gridiron Club, who wished to thank Foster-Gledhill, Inc., of Westwood, Mass., for their generous donation of a concession stand trailer to their club. This surely should make for more expedient service to the townspeople at various events. Community groups that are interested in using the trailer for an event of theirs should contact the Cohasset Gridiron Club for more information. And, a special thanks to Bob Gledhill!!



☐ On the subject of clubs, the next time you are in the Sullivan Gymnasium, take a look at all of the banners that are "flying". Whenever the CHS teams wins a championship or any title, the Boosters Club purchases a nifty banner announcing the same, and they are all hanging from the walls up there . . . sure is a nice tribute to all of the hard-working teams, and lets us know what great teams we have!

☐ Congratulations to Phil and Jo-Ann Lehr, who became the parents of a baby girl Dec. 30. Rebecca Marie is her name, and she was almost a celebrity, missing by a day. Of course grandparents Roberta and Arthur Lehr are strutting around as proud as peacocks, and who can blame them! Be sure to look for "grandma" to be out for a stroll with Rebecca as soon as weather permits!

☐ Had a nice note from Fran and Evie Dorr, are they ever having a ball! They have traveled over 6,000 miles so far, and spent Christmas in California and New Years in Reno. How's that for living! They are certain to have a lot of stories upon their return, can't wait to hear all about them.

☐ Alix Ash turned "sweet sixteen" recently and here's a special birthday wish from her family . . . and from all the rest of us.

☐ Next time you are in a card shop, why not send a card to Irma Bates, who is at the Cardigan Nursing Home, 59 Country Way Scituate, 02066. She would love a card or a note.

☐ Chris, Shirley and Bud Watters love Florida, and sure are busy people! Chris is a member of the basketball team there, and the team is a good one. He is playing guard now, and is becoming noted for his shot from the outside . . . perhaps another Larry Bird in the "wings" . . .

☐ The Red Cross Bloodmobile is due to arrive Tuesday, Jan. 27, and will be there from 2:30-5:30 p.m. We have all been hearing about the shortage of blood that is prevalent now, so be sure to give donating a thought. It isn't hard, doesn't hurt, and could save a life.

☐ Be sure to set aside two dollars this month . . . that is the cost of a box of Girl Scout Cookies, and they will be around shortly asking if you would like to purchase some. Not only is it a most worthy cause, the cookies are delicious.

☐ Hats off to Jack Conway! It seems that he is always doing something good for others, and this is no exeption. Jack was instrumental in raising $25,000 for the Main-Spring House, a shelter for the homeless, and the money will be used to pay for improvements to the 71-bed facility. Whenever there is a job to do, or someone that needs help, Jack Conway can be counted on to pitch right in, and he surely deserves a lot of credit.

☐ Robert Donahue is serving this year as a member of BATESTAR at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine, where he is enrolled as a senior.

BATESTAR, which stands for "Bates Student-Alumni Relations," is a campus organization whose members take part in a variety of activities geared to keeping alumni in touch and involved with the college.

A graduate of Deerfield Academy, Donahue is the son of Robert and Barbara Donahue of 185 Jerusalem Rd.

☐ Here's hoping that David Shumaker is back in the lineup for the Skippers real soon. David was injured during the Rockland game.

☐ Father Ryan will surely be missed "Around Town". He had to leave Saint Anthony's Parish due to his continuing angina attacks, his Doctor recommended a warmer climate. Here's hoping that a round or two of golf, a game that he truly loves, is part of the prescription that he received to maintain his health!

☐ You skiiers must be delighted with all of the snowstorms that the North is getting. Be sure to let us know how your budding Olympians are doing!

☐ Here's hoping that Nancy and Jeff Bettinger find a wonderful life in Weymouth. It is for certain that Cohasset's loss is Weymouth's gain, and we hope that the Bettingers will be back in town to stay someday.

☐ That's "all the new that's fit to print" this week, let us know what is happening in your house.

Back to drawing board

It looks as if the harbor study committee's proposal to ease the town's mooring problems is barely afloat.

Although a valiant attempt, we believe this latest option to add needed moorings in the harbor is not the best alternative. With a pat on the back for their continued work and effort, we must add, "It's back to the drawing board" for the harbor study committee.

There are just too many negatives that simply outweigh the positives of this proposal. The limited parking in a residential neighborhood and the redistribution of our fishing fleet once again, are two primary reasons why so many oppose the current marina plans.

Before we delve into the reasons why we oppose the marina plans, let us note that there was some confusion as to what selectmen voted. It has been verified by the town officials themselves that they indeed decided to prohibit the plans from proceeding on an official basis.

This does not mean the marina proposal will not surface again within the next few weeks. It simply means more information must be gathered before the study committee presents the plan to the zoning board for an official review.

Back to the plans. . . like so many residents who attended Monday night's public hearing, we feel the current plans have not been thoroughly studied. There are too many potential problems.

And, as one resident claimed, will an additional 60 moorings solve the problem or create more headaches? Will there be more people on the mooring waiting list as a result of the added space? And will 'outsiders' with their big, fancy boats actually be the ones to cough up the steep $50 per foot mooring fee?

Parking within the small lot on The Oaks is precarious at best. First, it will not accommodate the number of people using mooring slips in the marina. Second, the entrance and exit of cars to and from the lot will be dangerous on that quiet, residential street.

To the harbor study committee we extend our thanks for their continued efforts. They have been diligent in their efforts to find ways to improve our important coastal resources, while accommodating increased use.

But we, like so many others, are not convinced that this plan was well-executed and conceived. The harbor is one of the more important assets to this community. Careful planning for its future is a necessity.

Use of the harbor is imperative, but we must be careful not to overwhelm what limited resources remain.

Yankee Oil is opposed to marina

Letters

To the Editor:

Recent articles in your newspaper have characterized the Yankee Companies, Inc. as opposed to the Cohasset Harbor Study Committee's marina proposal. We are not opposed to allowing the town to use a portion of our property as a parking area for the existing town dock on Margin Street, as originally agreed in 1983, contingent upon the consent of our neighbors and the town's obtaining a zoning variance, as required in the 1983 variance, a highlighted copy of which is enclosed.

We are, however, opposed to a 496 foot, 24-hour, 72 slip, semi-private marina plan as it has been presented, because it does not address a number of critical issues:

(1) As was noted at the selectman's meeting in December, the 1983 variance did not contemplate construction of a large marina off our property. In addition, the design proposal does not provide for a connection of utilities to the marina or an office for the marina manager, which certainly could not be constructed on our property, since that was never in the original variance;

(2) The original variance intended to make parking available to any town resident with a beach sticker, not the privileged few who rent a marina slip;

(3) The planned marina has slips for 72 boats, but parking for at most 40 cars. The variance also specifically states that twenty spaces in the parking lot be reserved during the week for use by our employees; thus reducing the available parking. There will apparently be no parking for cars of the other 52 boat owners, or guests, except on Margin Street, which is quite narrow;

(4) The proposed parking lot would include demolishing part of the stone wall on Margin Street. The original variance anticipated use of the existing entrance to this parcel, not demolition of the stone wall.

(5) The fishermen who now use this part of the harbor report that Cox's Point Ledge, which is well above water at low tide, will block the entrance to the marina. This obstruction could make this project economically unviable, while the town is left paying off the bond debt for many years;

(6) As anyone who saw the area on January 2 knows, the subject property is wetlands and subject to periodic tidal flooding. For this reason, construction of a parking lot and other facilities requires State and Federal permits. No mention of this has been made in the press to date;

(7) In addition to the displacement of the commercial fishermen who earn their livelihood from the harbor, the proposal contemplates dredging which could alter the current mean low water line and thus reduce the land area of Yankee and other abutters. Does the town intend to take this land from the abutters by eminent domain? If so, what will it cost the town?;

(8) None of our neighbors has indicated support for the project, and several indicate they are opposed. Will the neighborhood be destroyed to squeeze a few more boats into the harbor? What consideration has been given to the large number of children in the neighborhood vs. the increase in traffic?;

(9) The variance expires in the year 2008, at which point the lot would be required to be returned to Yankee, or any subsequent owner, in the same condition as originally leased, i.e. without a parking lot or any access to the marina, thus making the lifespan of the marina less than 20 years;

(10) The potential disruption of the residential nature of the proposed location must be addressed, including practical solutions for the control of noise, lighting, littering, drinking, parking and general security in the parking lot and on the marina;

(11) Margin Street is one of the most beautiful areas in Cohasset. Serious consideration must be given to the impact a 40 car parking lot and 72 slip marina would have on the appearance of the harbor and its surrounding properties. This proposal, if accepted, may have a lasting detrimental impact on the harbor and on a town which justifiably prides itself on its well-preserved panoramic coastline.

These are a few of the many unresolved issues which we think must be answered before public monies are expended on a quasi-public project. We encourage the Cohasset selectmen to allow all interests to express their opinion at the hearing Monday, January 12. Assuming all these issues are resolved in the public interest, we do not intend to oppose this project. Thank you for publishing this letter in its entirety.

Very truly yours,
Paul J. Montle

Get streets straight

To the Editor:

May I respectfully point out an error in the caption of the photo on the front page of this week's Mariner?

The scene is Atlantic Avenue, not Jerusalem Road. The Mariner has joined the ranks of the many people, coming from Hingham or Hull, who quite understandably fail to notice that Jerusalem Road turns inland, to the right, at the corner behind the photographer.

People naturally assume that the main road they are on — Jerusalem — continues toward the causeway shown in the picture. I have urged the town fathers, without success, to erect a more prominent sign at the intersection. I live on Atlantic Avenue and each summer I redirect six or seven people who have been led astray by the inadequate signing.

Perhaps your additional error will help them see the light.

Message from the Director

A new state law offers a property tax exemption to certain homeowners who build additions to their homes so someone 60 or older can live there.

Elder Affairs Secretary Richard H. Rowland has alerted all Massachusetts elders of a new enabling legislation which will eliminate increased property taxes for some homeowners.

"This bill filed by Rep. James Miceli, was passed by the legislature in June and signed by Governor Dukakis in July," he said. "It will help keep more elders at home by providing tax incentives for homeowners.

"The more affordable home renovations and additions are for homeowners, the more opportunities elders will have to live at home with families, friends, or within a home environment," he added.

Not all homeowners will be eligible for tax credits, however, and certain guidelines must be met:

Although the new tax exemption has been approved by the state, in order for homeowners to claim it, the law must first be accepted by local town or city government.

While housing additions normally will be made to accommodate elder relatives, the resident and homeowners do not have to be related. The resident, however, must be an elder, i.e., at least 60 years of age.

The homeowner is free to charge rent to the elder, regardless of the relationship.

Only the areas of the house renovated for use by the elderly would be tax exempt, and this exemption applies only so long as the elder is in residence.

There is no limitation on the size of the addition, although most additions would include a bedroom and a bathroom, with the rest of the house being shared with the rest of the family.

Local housing authorities must verify annually that there is a person 60 years of age or older living in the renovated areas. If the elderly person leaves, the space can be re-occupied by another aged 60 or older person.

The person 60 or older cannot be the homeowner. The owner applying for the tax exemption must give local assessors a certificate from the local housing authority certifying that the improvements were necessary to provide housing for an elder.

The act is not retroactive and does not apply to improvements made before the enactment date by the city or town in which the property is located.

And again, the law must first be accepted by local town government.

This law strikes me as a law in which it could provide some help to decent hardworking people who want to be responsible and caring for their elders.

There are many people who have managed to have added these additions. They are the people caring at home for elders and loved ones who otherwise might have needed medical institution, or special housing at taxpayers expense.

We now need public policy that encourages individual solution, that offers social support to the family.

For more information, please contact the Cohasset Senior Center, 383-9112, Cohasset Housing Authority, 383-1948, or the Executive Office of Elder Affairs at 727-0690.

The Council on Aging would like to thank the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce for the beautiful Christmas tree—our first Trim-A-Tree was a great success; to the Amateur Garden Club for the three lovely centerpieces; and the Cohasset Garden Club for the great Shell Wreath, it was beautiful on the office door.

To all the volunteers that helped make our first year possible, we thank you all!!

Residents oppose plans for harbor marina . . .

He added, a new marina would benefit the town, because it would increase the capacity of the harbor by 60 boats. "It will provide space for people who have been waiting on the mooring list for years.

"There will be some displacement," he said, "but they will be accommodated in the harbor. The harbormaster agreed it can be done."

Pfaffmann argued, a new marina would provide "significant revenue" to the town and would ease the cost to the town regarding litigation over harbor disputes.

The committee estimated the total cost of the pier project, including financing at seven percent over 15 years, at $468,000.

Meanwhile, the annual operating costs were estimated at $40,000 and the revenue was figured at $91,000 per year.

"Those are conservative estimates," Pfaffmann said. "Keep those numbers in mind."

He noted, over 20 years, the revenue would make a positive net contribution to the town.

Robert Davenport of 17 Blackhorse Lane commented, "The cost of those slips concerns me the most. For people to put their boats on moorings now, it costs $4 per foot. So, mooring a 20-foot boat for the summer is an $80-expense.

"You're proposing that people pay $50 per foot; that's $1,000 for the summer. I think that's big bucks for a small boater," he said. "I'm afraid our harbor will be taken over by wealthy out-of-towners with big power boats.

"I would like to see your committee take another look at possible solutions to the problem." He suggested "star moorings," which could accommodate eight boats per mooring.

Fink noted, "We really haven't looked at operating the marina at a break-even level; we looked at the Scituate marina, which charges $39 per foot and operates at a profit. It turns a lot of money back to the town."

Selectman Diane Sullivan commented, "Twelve fishermen would be displaced by the marina. Would they be able to dock there?"

"No," Pfaffmann replied. "According to our lease with the Yankee Oil Company, commercial interests would not be allowed. Also, only boats up to 30 feet in length would be allowed to dock there."

Peggy Soltesz of 3 Border Street argued, "This is a commercial venture. We are, believe it or not, a residential neighborhood and we have been built up to the max.

"Parking in the area already is overcrowded," she added, "and I think with a marina in there, we would have people parking all the way up Elm Street to the police station.

"You want to change the tone of the harbor," she charged. "If you change it, you change one of the reasons you live in Cohasset."

Bob Redfield of 6 Ennis Court agreed. "We're really going to bitch up a pretty harbor if we allow a boat parking lot there," he said. "If we allow more boats in the harbor, it won't solve any problems. There will be more people on the waiting list, not fewer, and more problems. I'd like to see this thing stopped right here."

A large group of the marina's opponents punctuated Redfield's remarks with applause. "How will you figure who goes in the slips?" Gallagher asked.

"We'll go strictly by the waiting list," Pfaffmann said. "The problem is, anyone with a mooring space now should have a chance to get a space. This really hasn't been discussed yet. My thought is, give the people who have moorings now the first crack at it."

Jack Silvia, a commercial fisherman, told the board he is one of the 12 who would lose a mooring if the marina is built.

"Who's to say where we would move?" he asked. "Will we lose more of the commercial mooring area?"

Pfaffmann answered, "The harbormaster, Harry Ritter will set up moorings in a string parallel to the pier, which will accommodate more boats in the same area. Also, he will move the boats on a one-to-one basis. For example, where seven pleasure boats might be moved from their moorings to the marina, seven commercial boats would be moved over to Government Island.

"We're not against the fishermen," he told Silvia. "The fishermen are our first and foremost priority. We want what's best for everyone. We want to do this with the least amount of disruption as possible."

Plans for the construction of a parking lot on Margin Street raised the concerns of neighborhood residents.

Suzanne Terry of 32 Margin Street commented, "You've proposed 42 parking spaces for 60 slips; that's not enough.

"I live directly across from the entrance way," she added. "That already is a dangerous curve there, and I don't believe Yankee Oil will let you bust through the wall for another entrance. I oppose this thing technically based on parking."

Dan Prisble of 60 Jerusalem Road spoke in favor of the marina proposal.

"I have been on the waiting list for a mooring for three years," he said. "I think if you had to introduce the two-by-four for construction today, you couldn't do it; it's flammable and it rots.

"Forget the parking," he said; "if I could get a mooring, I wouldn't mind riding my bicycle three miles to get there." About a dozen supporters hooted their approval.

In a show of hands at the selectmen's request, opponents of the plan out-numbered supporters about 3-1, though a number of people in the Town Hall did not indicate a position either way.

Board Chairman Diane Sullivan commented, "Much still needs to be answered."

Her colleague, Rocco Laugelle agreed. "I don't believe you're ready to proceed, but you can talk to the building inspector, Donald Robbins, without our vote."

Laugelle moved against allowing the harbor study committee to proceed and go before the zoning board of appeals.

Selectman Clifford Mitman argued, "Anytime we try to discuss changing the harbor, it is next to impossible. There needs to be more talk; we shouldn't just shut off the conversation."

Gallagher agreed with Mitman, "For the amount of work the committee has put into this project, I don't want to see the project just stopped tonight."

Sullivan commented, "I'm opposed to this plan. I know changes are needed in the harbor, but I want to bring in the maximum number of boats at a minimum cost.

"There has to be a better way to approach the problem," she added. "When we get more information, we'll know better where we stand."

Beechwood Church services

The Beechwood Congregational Church invites everyone to worship Sunday mornings at 10:45. Pastor Stephen S.J. Hall. Child care provided.

The Sunday School meets from 9:30-10:30 a.m. Children in grades K-8 are invited to attend. Friends are always welcome.

Pastor Hall is doing a series of 10 sermons that will examine the role of faith in meeting the challenge of the major trends that effect our daily lives. Invite a friend to come and explore with us how very much Jesus is alive and involved in every minute of our daily lives. This week's sermon. . . A WORLD ECONOMY.

LIKE TO SING? Our choir is in need of voices. One doesn't need to be a church member to join the choir. See Alan Kingsley.

Mark your calendar for Jan. 15 at 6:30 p.m. for the Beechwood Social. Bring yourself, family and friends along with a covered dish to the church for an evening of fun and fellowship. Any questions call 393-0211.

Our thoughts and prayers are with Marion Ellis of Scituate as she is homebound with illness. We look forward to her in her usual place in the choir.

St. Stephen's Church

St. Andrews's Church burned tragically on Christmas night. The historic clock in the tower is destroyed, although the bell is preserved. The organ is a total loss. The marvelous Tiffany stained glass window needs major restoration. Plans are already underway to rebuild and restore this fourth oldest church in the diocese.

At the same time that the loss from this fire is being experienced there is an epiphany going on. God is being manifested. Like a family that pulls together in crisis, Fr. Bob Mackie of St. Andrew's shares that the love and support of all within and outside the parish have been overwhelming. We are seeing a welling up of the power of resurrection life. At the moment there is nothing that St. Andrew's needs but our love and prayers. It is in these that we are seeing the grace and new possibility of God which is nothing less than what the wise men saw at Bethlehem and which is what this new season of the church year, Epiphany, means.

Feast of Lights—Fifteen young people from the Church School will participate in an Epiphany pageant which will be part of the 10 a.m. Sunday service. The students, from kindergarten to junior high school level, will present readings and tableaux depicting the Annunciation, Nativity, and Adoration of the Christ Child by the Wise Men. Let us all come and adore Him at this lovely service.

Rehearsal for the pageant will be held Saturday, Jan. 17, at 2 p.m.

Adult Education Committee Workshop—The Adult Education Committee will meet with Ed Hyatt (who led our fall class on connecting our faith with work and daily life) for a workshop Friday evening, Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m., and Saturday morning, Feb. 7 at 9 a.m. The purpose of the workshop will be to become clearer about our own goals as a committee and to organize ourselves to better carry them out.

Annual Parish Meeting—The annual parish meeting offers the church the opportunity to meet together and look at ourselves as a Christian community. As participants at the meeting, we can gain a greater understanding of parish workings, ask questions, and offer suggestions. The meeting will end with an informal brunch. Please attend!

Epiphany Adult Education—Sunday afternoons in February at 3 p.m. will see presentations on faith and the arts. After each program tea will be served. Fr. John Gallop will speak about how Russian icons embody faith and art. Our organist, Stephen Lee, will offer an organ recital and speak about how faith and music interact. March 1 at the fellowship time, we will have an art show. So all of you who participate in crafts, needlepoint, painting, sculpturing, and other art forms get something ready and we will celebrate our common creativity!

Cohasset Hardware remains a family business

"We've diversified," Helen said, "but still we sell mostly nuts, bolts and paint, things like that. A gift shop, it's not."

Her husband agreed, "It's still basically a hardware store."

Of Cohasset Hardware's 10 employees, four are family. "It's a typical family business," he said.

Helen chuckled. "We can't have all of us down there at the same time, or it would be like World War III," she said.

Hardware is a popular and profitable business pursuit and the Watsons have received many unsolicited offers for the family business.

"It represents a tremendous kind of security," Louis said. "You can do a lot of things with your own business; when it's yours, you don't have people from GM coming to you with promotions and stuff."

In Cohasset, Massachusetts' answer to Hollywood, running the local hardware store has been anything but boring.

Louis has framed, a letter he received from an old friend, Henry Fonda.

"I am a hardware store freak," Fonda wrote, "and I am sure that if I ever get to Cohasset, I will come away with half the store."

As a director at the South Shore Music Circus, Louis made another acquaintance, Bob Hope. The star wrote to thank Louis for selling him a car radio.

In the summer of 1986, Hollywood filmmakers transformed Cohasset Hardware into Eastwick Hardware for their movie, "The Witches of Eastwick."

"We thought it was great," Louis said. "They were very nice people. You'd think they would be a bunch of prima donnas, but they were really very nice. It was exciting to see a movie being made."

Helen added, "I think it was a good thing to happen for the whole town."

The Watsons praised Warner Brothers' generosity and diligence in picking up the feathers they blew about town. They also were pleased the filming drew in a large number of people, as customers to Cohasset.

Cohasset Hardware played a key role in the summer's cinematic extravaganza.

"They bought some summer furniture from our store," Helen recalled. "You should have seen Lou's face when they put it on a truck and then blew it down the street."

The sign from Eastwick Hardware adorns a wall in the Watson's store.

Despite the glitter and bright lights, the Watsons maintain it is the townspeople who have made their store the landmark it is.

"We've had people 50, 60, 70 years old, who had worked in that store when they were kids," Louis said. "They come in and know where everything is.

"The thing I've enjoyed most about this business," he said, "is meeting different people and getting to know them. Without exaggeration, we've met about 75 percent of the people in town. We've gotten to be real townies."

Local folks need not be shy of the store's new movie star status, the Watsons contend. It's still a great place to buy a box of nails or the doohickey that goes on the whatsis under the gizmo in your garage.

CHS sports week in review

Tuesday, Jan. 6 — The boys' basketball team got caught between Rockland and a hard place, losing 73-69 in overtime. The loss snapped Cohasset's South Shore League win streak at 44 games. The defeat also dropped the Skippers into second place, behind undefeated East Bridgewater.

Friday, Jan. 9 — Eddie and the Cruisers crushed previously unbeaten East Bridgewater, 70-40, to regain first place in the South Shore League. Bryan Edwards slammed in 23 points, grabbed nine rebounds and had seven assists to lead the Cohasset attack.

The girls' basketball team raised its record to 8-0, with a 68-36 thrashing of East Bridgewater. Maureen O'Leary popped in 18 points, snagged eight rebounds and had four steals to pace the Skippers. Cindy Spooner added 16 points and 10 rebounds, while Sarah Dickerman chipped in 13 points and snatched 11 off the boards.

The ice hockey squad humbled Hull with a 5-3 come-from-behind South Shore League win. Jim Gallagher turned a hat trick and Dan Pompeo slapped in two goals.

Monday, Jan. 12 — The gymnastics team fell to Hanover, 114.85 to 83.3, as Dana Curran swept all four events. Cohasset's Michelle Hartley kept it close, capturing the second spot in each event.

First Parish programs

Perspectives, 1987 — Saturday, January 17 from 10 a.m. - noon at The Parish House living room.

The women who participated in the experimental Perspectives discussion program last fall had several recommendations; keep it personal, meet no more than twice monthly, try a new time, 10 a.m. (rather than noon), discuss "Men" some more as the earlier discussion's focus was almost entirely business relationships.

They hoped also that a given topic could be discussed on successive Saturdays to allow time for reflection after the initial meeting (and to give those with time conflicts a second chance). Unfortunately, the church calendar is full in January. The only meeting in January will be January 17, at 10 a.m: "Men as Partners"

According to one dictionary there are two principal meanings of the word "partner": one who shares or, alternately, who has a joint interest. What is your perspective?

February 14 at 10 a.m. and February 21, at 10 a.m. "The Challenge of Being Alone"

Circle Dinners — The first Circle Dinners of the new year will be held Saturday, Jan. 24, and Saturday, Jan. 31. Sign up for either day by calling Gladys at the church office 383-1100.

South Shore Cluster Dinner — Thursday, Jan. 15, at 6:30 p.m. Dinner is at 7 p.m. The cost is $4 at Channing Church, 45 Webster St. in Rockland. The speaker is Rev. Stephen Shick, Director of the UU Peace Network.

The Rev. Shick will bring us up-to-date on the efforts of the UU Peace Network. "The Peace Activator," a supplement to the November UU World briefly described its activities. He will share how this network of UU volunteers helps their churches to co-operate with others who are working for nuclear disarmament and for peace.

Call the church office 383-1100 to make your reservation before January 13.

Feast of Lights Jan. 18

The children of St. Stephen's Church School will perform a "Feast of Lights" celebrating the arrival of the three wise men at Bethlehem which traditionally took place during this season of Epiphany to present their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh to the Christ child.

This Epiphany celebration will take place in the church during the regular 10 a.m. service Sunday, Jan. 18.

The three kings, Jeremiah Stevenson, and Jamie and Ian Simons, bear their gifts at last year's Festival at St. Stephen's.

The role of Mary will be played by Dawn Massa-Williams; Joseph by Ian Simons; Isaiah by Wiley Wakeman; and Gabriel by Ann Senechal. The shepherds will feature Jeremiah Stevenson, Morgan Bigley, James Drybanski, and Ryan Stazko. Molly and Abby Pease, along with Neely Wakeman, will be angels. The three kings will be played by Jamie Simons, Hunt Pile, and Kyle Whiteley.

At the end of the service all the congregation will light candles signifying the light of Christ which has appeared to all and is carried by Christians into all the world.

Obituary

Steve 'Crusher' Casey

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 10 a.m. today, Jan. 15 in St. Anthony's Church for Steve (Crusher) Casey, 78, former heavyweight wrestling champion of the world, who died Saturday in the Brockton Veterans Administration Hospital following a long battle with cancer.

Crusher Casey was a nationally-known and recognized sports figure in the 1930's and 40's and was a hero to youth throughout this area. After his sports career ended in the late 1940's Crusher Casey opened the Back Bay barroom which bore his name, "Crusher Casey's". In 1968, Mr. Casey was critically wounded when three armed robbers held up the bar.

In addition to his prowess on the mats, Mr. Casey developed his rowing skills which he said conditioned him for his wrestling bouts. He used to scull every day across Kenmare Bay in his native County Cork, Ireland and on Sundays to Mass. He also competed in regattas on Lake Killarney with his seven brothers, his father and his grandfather.

When he was brought to the United States at the age of 26 by a Lexington wrestling promoter, he competed in mock sculling races with crews from Harvard on the Charles River. He also participated in sculling events throughout New England and in Canada. In 1949, he and his brothers, Jim and Tom, won a one-mile contest against the famed Boston scull racer, Russell Codman. They received $1,000 and a cup given by the late Massachusetts governor and U.S. senator Leverett Saltonstall, who was also a skilled sculler.

Crusher Casey was king of the wrestling world from 1936 to 1946, drawing throngs and thousands of fans to the Boston Arena, Boston Garden, the Braves Field, Fenway Park, and the old Mechanics Hall. He wrestled in every state except Florida.

The first world championship he won was in 1937 and for the next ten years he successfully defended that title. In 1976, Mr. Casey was touted at a dinner in Hull attended by more than 240 people, including many famous sports figures.

He leaves his wife, Mary (Neiter) Casey; two sons, Patrick Casey of Cohasset; and Michael Casey of Hull; a daughter, Margaret Marr of New York City; five brothers, James Casey of Texas, and Patrick, Michael, John and Daniel, all of Ireland; a sister, Josephine Casey of Ireland, and three grandchildren.

AFS student 'Lupo' ignites fans' passions

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

"He's a crowd favorite," Cohasset High School basketball coach Eddie Minelli said. "When Lupo takes off his sweats and goes into the game, the crowd screams and yells."

Marcello "Lupo" Luppichini, an AFS student from Concepción, Chile has become a popular member of the CHS basketball squad, Eddie and the Cruisers.

Lupo came to Cohasset in July, 1986, having studied theEnglish language for only one year.

"One of my friends told me a lot about the AFS experience from when he went to San Francisco," Lupo said. "He told me, 'I think this would be excellent for you.'" Lupo's parents agreed, and he took the required test.

Lupo was assigned to the St. Onge family of 16 Stanton Road, Cohasset. "When I received my family, I was so happy to come to Massachusetts," he said.

The language barrier was an obstacle at first, he commented, but with help from his new family and friends, Lupo met the challenge .

Andy, a friend of his from Chile taught Lupo words and phrases, and sent him tapes loaded with common expressions. And the St. Onges bought a bunch of dictionarys to help bridge the language gap.

"When he first came here," coach Minelli said, "I thought because of the differences in language and basketball skills, I might have to babysit him, but it has worked out real well."

He added, "Sometimes I find myself yelling or slowing down my speech, but he understands very well."

Though basketball is the number two sport behind soccer in Lupo's homeland, Minelli observed, it is still a relatively new sport in Chile.

"Our program is much different," the coach said. "The pace is much faster; it's like our team goes 80 or 90 m.p.h., while other teams travel at 40 or 50 m.p.h.

"Lupo has good coordination and average speed," he explained,"but his skills were not attuned to our fast pace, so he was sort of stymied by our style.

"This is not to say that he couldn't adapt," Minelli added, "but it would be like me going to Canada to play hockey with the Canadians."

As a result of the style stymie Lupo has logged but little time in competition on the court.

The Chilean Cruiser commented, "Basketball is my favorite sport, I like to watch the games and the Celtics are my favorite American team.

"I don't care if I don't get to play here," he said. "It's good for me to practice and keep in shape."

Lupo noted, along with the language barrier, it was difficult for him to come to one of the best teams in the league. But just as he has learned the language here quickly, Lupo has picked up on the Cruiser style.

Minelli noted, "If he were here longer, he probably would have been able to make more of a contribution.

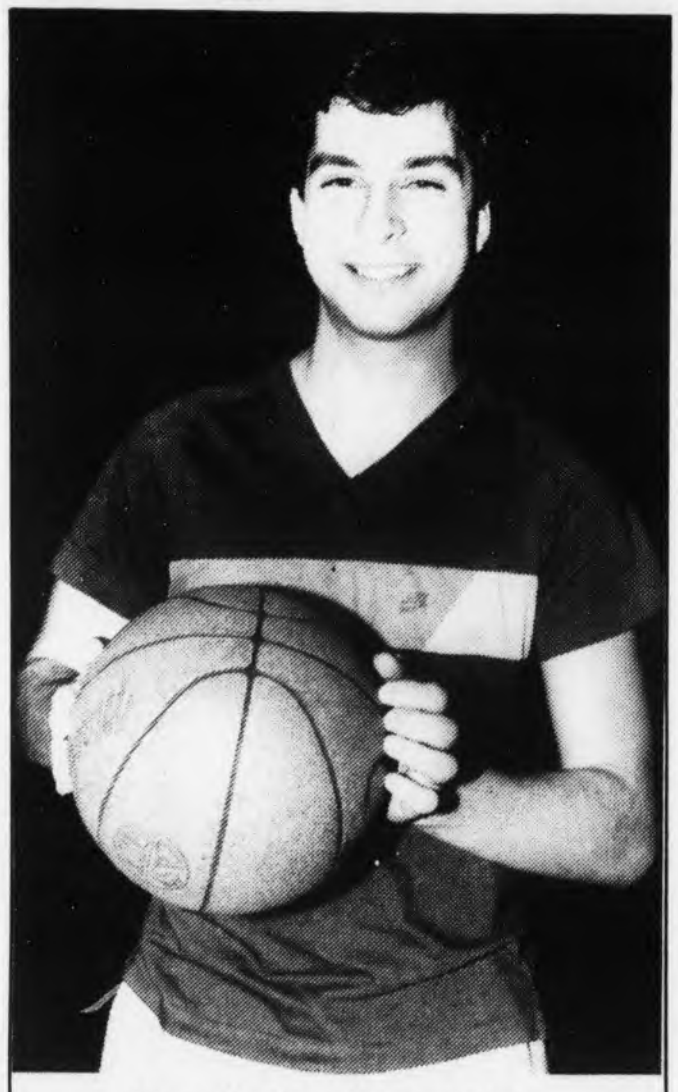
"Looking at him warming up," the coach added, "you would not know he's a foreign student; he has the idiosyncracies of an American player."

"They have a lot of movements and plays," Lupo said. "It's not a big problem, but it has been a problem for me. I'll watch the games and learn how to play, so I might be able to play when I go back home."

Lupo said he hopes to graduate from Cohasset High School this spring, and attend the University of Concepción in 1988, to study medecine.

His exposure to the English language, he said, will help him as a medical student, because many of the texts are written inEnglish.

Minelli said he hopes Lupo will take along with him not only the knowledge he has gained here, but fond memories of his American experience.



"I hope he has experienced out of it what we've experienced," Minelli said: "the bus rides; the trips to McDonald's; the wins; the practices and the cameraderie..."

On Feb. 11, Lupo will journey to California with his friends from AFS. "I'm looking forward to seeing the other side of America," he said.

Lupo explained, he hopes to compare notes on California with his friend, Andy, when he returns to Concepción in July.

Although this Cruiser will cruise far from Cohasset, he vowed to keep in contact with his "great" American family, the St. Onges, and said he hopes to come back here in a couple of years.

"I really like it here," Lupo said.

Treasure Chest Inc. reduces work-force in half

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner Staff

Seventy-two employees — nearly half of the workforce at Treasure Chest Advertising Inc., the successor to South Shore Publishing Co. — were laid off last week in a move to scrap two obsolete presses.

About 80 employees remain at the sprawling printing plant at 777 Country Way, just outside North Scituate Village, according to Robert Turner, corporate vice president of human resources.

The California-based firm bought South Shore Publishing in October 1985 from one of the firm's original founders, Chester D. Catler of Cohasset.

"We had three presses, two which were quite old and not very well maintained," Turner said. "The quality was off, and we could not remain competitive.

"We laid off press crews and proportionate support, maintenance and office staff. About 60 of the 72 were pressmen," he said.

Last year Treasure Chest moved a press into the Scituate plant with the intent to use it until new equipment could be purchased and at the same time keep production at a high level.

"But in the last three or four months, the Scituate operation was losing money," said Turner.

"It had the capacity for $20 million in sales volume. When these presses are replaced, we'll have bigger and wider presses which can generate between $30 million and $35 million in annual sales," he said.

Treasure Chest has 17 plants throughout the United States with a workforce of some 4,000 employees. Sales posted for the last fiscal year of the privately held company were in excess of $400 million, Turner said.

The new equipment most likely will require a new building, he said.

"We are looking for another site. Our intent is to relocate in this vicinity, within a 10-mile radius.

"We have no specific date when that will occur —three months to a year," Turner said. "But, rather than laying off employees without a specific (return date), we had a permanent reduction."

Four executives from the Glendora, Calif., corporate offices came out to Scituate last week and met with employees to outline the company's plans.

The 72 who were laid off were told to report to Kimball's by the Sea in Cohasset at 8 a.m. last Thursday, while those who remain at the plant met with company officials on site.

Instead of two weeks' notice, they were given severance pay which included a bonus based on the number of years employed both by Treasure Chest and South Shore Publishing.

Some workers had been with the company just 90 days, but one man had been with South Shore Publishing since he graduated from high school, and this had been his only job.

Last Friday, two executives — Michael Johnson, director of benefits and compensation, and John Cornelius, employment manager — conducted an outplacement workshop for the employees, but only a dozen attended.

The workshop was divided into two sections: a closed-door bitch session for workers to vent their anger, then an open discussion about the job of getting a job.

"Now, what do I do to get re-employed?" asked Johnson. "Unless we are independently wealthy, and most of us are not, we need to work.

"It's not just for the money; there's value in working. We can enjoy it.

"We need to look at ourselves and (assess) what we do well and what are our weaknesses," he said.

"People are hired to solve problems," said Cornelius. "So employers like to see a person who looks for solutions, who has given a lot of thought to his job," he said.

In seeking a new job, applicants should think in terms of skills, not job titles, they emphasized.

And, they underscored, "Be honest. It's not a stigma to say you were let go. This is happening often with company mergers."

Frank Cady of the Division of Employment Security spoke briefly to the group, outlining available benefits and job listings.

"If you've been with the company for a year, you will be paid about 54 percent of your gross wage," Cady said. Individuals with families may get an additional $6 for each dependent, he added.

There's a one-week waiting period before unemployment benefits are distributed, he said.

Cady told the group that the state employment offices in Quincy and Plymouth offer tests to determine interests and aptitude as well as training programs.

He said there is a listing of some 5,000 jobs which is updated daily.

"Some of you may be eligible for college, so you shouldn't waste your time. You should fill out your application right away," he advised.

He said that Spencer Press in Hingham, which plans to consolidate its operations at its Wells, Maine, facility, is looking for printers. "They will pay for housing and give bonuses to help get people started up there," Cady said.

"The biggest problem (you will encounter) is the wage structure.

"There are millions of jobs out there in the service industry, such as McDonald's, Burger King, food outlets.

After 21 years, Cohasset man handed 'pink' slip

The letter from Treasure Chest Advertising Co. Inc. was brief: Report to Kimball's by the Sea at 8 a.m. Thursday, Jan. 8.

It was only then that Clarence "Junior" Litchfield had an inkling that something was amiss.

Even though there had been rumblings of job layoffs, Litchfield, a 42-year-old pressman, thought his job was secure.

After all, he had weathered lots of management changes during his 21-year history at the North Scituate printing plant and stayed with South Shore Publishing after Treasure Chest bought the business in October 1985.

"This is the only job I ever had," said Litchfield from his Weymouth home.

"I graduated from Cohasset High in 1963, and this was my first fulltime job.

"I started when South Shore Publishing first moved to the new plant in 1966, first as a jogger and stacker.

"Back then, there were a lot of older people who stayed on, who didn't leave — not like today where people change jobs. So I've been a pressman for just 17 years," he explained.

Litchfield said he is unsure of what he will do, but he has decided not to take Treasure Chest up on its offer to relocate at its Windsor Locks, Conn., printing plant.

"I want to stay in this area, my family is here," said Litchfield, whose family roots on the South Shore extend back to the 1600s.

"Two of my daughters are in college, two in high school, and my wife works.

"Pressmen are a vanishing breed, so I don't think I'll have trouble finding a job," he said. "There are a lot of jobs in this area."

For Bob Cooper, a pressman for 17 years, he is thinking seriously to moving to Treasure Chest's plant just outside Hartford.

"Everything seems to happen at once," said Cooper whose two-and-a-half-year-old son just came home from the hospital after a respiratory illness.

"I was a little surprised how they did it," said the lifelong Hull resident. "They laid off the crews who worked on the 845 presses."

Fellows with less seniority working on the new press brought up from Treasure Chest's Atlanta, Ga., plant, stayed on.

"My wife and I have been talking it over a lot this weekend, trying to decide what to do.

"They will relocate us, put up my family until we find a place and pay for some of the relocation costs," said the 38-year-old Cooper. "I'm going down there this week to look at the plant."

Besides, he has a brother who lives in the area, he added.

"I knew this was coming," said 58-year-old Bill Carroll, who has worked for South Shore Publishing and Treasure Chest a total of 15 years.

"It hurts. Any time. I had two other companies close down, but this company I liked. It was like family.

"We had pride in South Shore Publishing. We felt we were the best printers, best truck drivers, best stockers.

"I've gone through this before. I have a hell of a supporting wife.

"The first time it happened, we had five kids, some still in diapers. The second time, it was just as tough. The kids were in junior high, high school, college. We needed the money.

"Now it's just my wife working and me, and already, a couple of people have offered me jobs," Carroll said. "I'm not worried."

Amateur Gardeners meeting

The Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset will meet Tuesday, Jan. 20, at 1 p.m. in the home of Mrs. Edna Finnegan, President. Co-hostess will be Mrs. Jean Gould.

The program, a slide and lecture presentation, on European Gardens will be given by Caroline Brown of the South Shore Natural Science Center.

School news

Early release day

Thursday, Jan. 22, will be an EARLY RELEASE DAY in the Cohasset Public Schools. There will be no afternoon Kindergarten sessions and other students will be dismissed according to the following schedule:

Junior/Senior High School—12:20 p.m.; Deer Hill School—12:40 p.m.; Joseph Osgood School—12:50 p.m.

LUNCH WILL BE SERVED IN ALL OF THE SCHOOLS.

This EARLY RELEASE DAY has been authorized by the Cohasset School Committee to allow the staff members at the elementary schools to participate in a workshop on Early Warning Signs of Depression in Pre-adolescence. The Junior/Senior High School will hold department meetings.

Gov't Day delegate news

Joe Mazza, the Cohasset High School Student Government Day Delegate attended an all-day workshop in Lakeville recently. Accompanied by his faculty advisor, Mr. Edward F. Sheehan, Joe, who is a member of the juniorclass, listened to speakers representing different levels of state government.

In April, Joe and over 300 other student delegates will take over the reigns of state government for one day. On Friday, January 23 in the State House, there will be glass bowl drawing to match students with their counterparts in state government.

Dr. Curtis Hall, Southeast Mass. Regional Education Director, welcomed the student delegates and said "some of you will be impressed enough with student government day that you will later on become a politial leader either on the local, state or national level."

The assembled delegates then heard a law case presented by the Honorable John P. Curley, Jr., presiding Justice of Barnstable District Court. Judge Curley presented a case to the students and engaged them in a lively debate on the merits of the prosecution and defense arguments.

The final speaker at the worship was Cohasset's own, Mary Jeanette Murray, representative from the third Plymouth District. Murray challenged the students to take an active role in state government. "Write and visit your representative. Tell him/her what's on your mind," she said. She outlined the role of the state legislator in representing the wishes of the people in her district.

Boston Globe art awards

Colleen Lucas from Cohasset High School is pleased to announce that she has entered the artwork of nine of her students in the Boston Regional Preliminary of The Boston Globe Scholastic Art Awards. The Students are: Tracy Lowenhagen, Sandra Dunn, Meredith Deveney, Elizabeth Zadel, Alexandra Redfield, Jenna Emmons, Marlisa Clapp and Dudley Bryon. Their artwork was selected for entry due to its creativity and excellence of composition. A panel of distinguished artists and art educators will judge all the entries at Mass. College of Art, the host for this regional preliminary. The panelists will select works to be exhibited and to be awarded Gold Keys. In addition, the outstanding portfolio submitted from this region will be awarded a $1,000 scholarship from the Boston Globe. The award winning works from this region will be exhibited at Mass. College of Art from Jan. 18 to Jan. 26. Following this exhibit, the works will be forwarded to Boston where further judging will determine the state's Blue Ribbon finalists for final judging in New York.

Special gifts from ninth grade

As part of an annual ninth grade Humanities project, students have been collecting money in their classrooms and the lunchroom since Thanksgiving.

Dec. 17 representatives from the ninth grade class did the grocery shopping so that they could provide Christmas meals for two families in Cohasset. The delivery of the meals will be handled by the Social Service League. In addition to the money spent on the two families, two checks in the amount of $218 each were sent to Kingston House and The Home for Little Wanderers. All ninth grade students participated in one way or another so that they could share their good fortune with others.

Bake sale

The PSO says a great big "thank you" to all of the mothers of the junior and senior high school students who baked for the Christmas Appreciation Collation at CHS. Christmas floral arrangements were placed in the several teachers' rooms. A grand time was had by all.

O'Keefe "Artist of Month"

The Cohasset PSO "Artist of the Month" program for fourth, fifth and sixth grade students at the Deer Hill School has purchased a videotape from the Smithsonian Institute of the works of reknowned American artist, Georgia O'Keefe.

During the month of January, PSO-trained mothers will work with the children, with the cooperation of art teacher, Jean O'Malley, in producing watercolor still life paintings.

During March the "Artist of the Month" series will be focused on the practical "art" of advertising.

Very soon students at the Joseph Osgood School will be exposed to these valuable art programs, under the direction of Osgood PSO representative, Sue McNamara.

Kindergarten changeover

Monday, Jan. 26, 1987, Kindergarteners will exchange morning and afternoon class assignments. Morning Kindergarteners will be assigned to the afternoon session while current afternoon assignees will become morning Kindergarteners. Morning kindergarten hours are from 8:55 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. while the afternoon session meets from 12:15 to 2:55 p.m.

South Shore Art Center to hold photography courses

Before taking your winter vacation, learn to use your camera creatively by enrolling in a South Shore Art Center photography course.

The Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset offers several courses on its winter schedule which are designed to aid the amateur photographer in becoming more creative with a camera. Advanced registration is required for these and all courses on the winter schedule.

Freelance photographer Paul Fortin will teach two courses in photography-one designed for the beginning photographer and the other for the more experienced photographer. His Beginning Photography which meets on Mondays from 7:30-9:30 p.m. beginning January 19 is a lecture course covering all the basics including F stops, shutter speeds, films, filters, composition, lighting and subjects. Emphasis will be on recognizing the elements of good photography.

The more advanced course which will meet on Wednesdays from 7:30-9:30 p.m. starting Jan. 21 will explore various subjects including portrait, people and landscape. The course will include discussion and critique on aesthetics, composition and approach needed to create a good photograph.

Bridgewater State College professor John Droege will teach Beginning Darkroom on Thursdays from 7:30-9:30 p.m. starting January 22. This course is designed as a step-by-step introduction in basic darkroom skills beginning with "how the camera works." Students will learn how to develop black and white film, how to enlarge and print burning and dodging techniques and how to mount and mat finished work.

Droege has an MA and MFA from Notre Dame University and he studied photography with color landscape photographer Elliot Porter.

Selectmen seek to prioritize capital projects

Several capital improvement projects may now be fundable because of a large amount of cash available through retiring town debts.

Selectmen will be prioritizing a list of projects that may be funded with the $500,000 which will be freed from retiring debts and the town's stabilization fund.

Among the projects to be considered will be establishing a transfer station at the town's landfill, funding the town's sewer project, a town hall addition and associated renovations, schoool repairs, the police and fire station renovation project and the rehabilitation of Milliken Field.

Selectman Diane Sullivan explained that based on calculations made by the town accountant, the town may be able to afford funding three of the projects. She suggested selectmen meet with the advisory committee, and the capital budget committee to prioritize those three most important projects.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew explained that the $80,000 the town appropriates each year into the stabilization fund may be freed if the town decides not to pour money into it for the next one or two years. Another $50,000 could be made available if the state assumes the unfunded pension and liability fund. Together with the $300,000 from retiring debts and the $200,000 freed from the 1988 pension and retirement fund, the town may possibly have as much as $700,000 available for capital projects, he estimated.

Selectman Sullivan warned that all the figures cited were "ballpark" estimates.

According to the rough estimates compiled by Selectman Sullivan, Andrew, Capital Budget chairman Ned Tebbetts, and Town Accountant Jo-ann Whittemore, the town hall addition will cost approximately $700,000 to be paid through a 20-year bond at an estimated interest rate of seven percent.

The other estimations include: the sewer project, $1,950,000 with a 30-year bond; the transfer station, $525,000 with a 15-year bond; the police and fire station renovation, $750,000 with a ten-year bond; the Milliken Field, $550,000 with a 15-year bond; town hall renovations, $250,000; school repairs, $550,000 with a 10-year bond.

According to selectman Sullivan, the town officials independently grouped together the same list of projects compiled last year by the capital budget committee. The top projects selected by the town officials, Sullivan stated, include: 1. funding the sewer project and the landfill station; 2. funding the police and fire station renovations, and 3. funding the town hall addition. Milliken Field, she noted, was the last project on their list.

"We're trying to find out what the priorities of this board (of selectmen) are and what the other town boards think. I think there's a need to work on this regularly. What do you think we must do for the town right now?" Sullivan questioned.

Official seeks more answers on CHL policy

As a result of last week's meeting with DEQE, water commissioner Ronald Goodwin said he has additional questions to discuss with the local health board.

Several local officials, including members of the health board and water commission, met last week to discuss the current status of Cohasset Heights Limited with members of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE). Sen. William Golden requested the informal meeting with local and state officials.

Two major issues were discussed, according to commissioner Goodwin. First, he reiterated, DEQE refused to allow CHL to apply for a variance from the groundwater discharge permit application. The privately-owned landfill operation sought the variance, he said, on the basis that sodium chloride from a nearby DPW salt shed was contaminating the groundwater flowing beneath the commercial landfill on Crocker Lane.

A second issue raised during the discussions, according to Goodwin, was whether CHL has valid liability insurance. When asked by Sen. Golden to produce the document, the attorney representing CHL refused. The town's special legal counsel, Michael Leon, said the only document he had been given was the insurance certification which had expired in October.

"It seems there's a question whether they actually have the insurance now," Goodwin stated. "That question is a problem."

The insurance is a requirement cited by the health board as the town's surety when the dump is closed. The insurance would protect the town against future contamination from the landfill and would pay the cost of restoring the land should contamination occurr.

Goodwin plans to discuss several issues this week with the local health board, including the possibility of split-sampling groundwater samples taken from the monitoring wells at CHL.

"At the last water commission meeting, I suggested we find funding for engineers to do split-sampling at the well sites," Goodwin said, explaining that the process would be a cross-check to ensure that the groundwater levels flowing from CHL to Great Swamp and Lily Pond are acceptable.

Currently, GHR conducts quarterly well site tests for the board of health. The split-sampling would be completed by independent engineers, he suggested, that would take tests on a few of those wells and compare their results to GHR.

Goodwin also expressed his concern about the proposed plans by CHL to construct a treatment plant at the landfill site. "I'm worried about a $1 1/2 million plant, which is experimental at best," he said. "The owners have said that if the proposed expansion into Area Four is not approved, the ladfill will be closed by spring. Why would they want to build this plant if the landfill only has a brief life left?"

Cohasset Joins Mothers March

More than 125 Cohasset March of Dimes volunteer marchers will call on an estimated 1500 homes during this January campaign to improve the health of America's children.

Last year, over $1.5 million was allocated to fund research programs at such leading institutions as Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Tufts University, the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, and Children's Hospital. These grants include research in the areas of fetal alcohol syndrome, cystic fibrosis, insulin production, Down's syndrome, low-birth weight, and more.

Politicus

by David A. Mittell, Jr.

State of the State, 1987: Part II, The Environment

If, as here asserted last week, home-building tends to accompany the mature state of the business cycle, Massachusetts has reached the "mature stage" in spades. Throughout the state, even in the once depressed neighborhoods of Boston, even in the half-forgotten mill towns of Worcester County, even in the formerly job-starved Franklin County on the west bank of the Connecticut, new housing is going up everywhere.

Moreover, in the prosperous Southeastern Massachusetts communities where Politicus circulates, which is the fastest-growing region of the state, housing is hotter than Hades. Such has been the case for most of the last forty years in the affluent coastal towns from Hingham to Kingston where, it seems, the demand for upscale housing operates independently of the larger economy.

But in the last few years this demand has gone inland to such an extent that there remains no community in Southeastern Massachusetts that isn't a "hot property" today. It is small wonder that these charming, forested inland towns have been discovered, for they represent mighty good living to a great many people looking to escape from Boston or its inner suburbs.

All the construction we see in Southeastern Massachusetts is good news in many ways. It means that our economy is strong and that our people have work. Nearly vanished from the region is the rural poverty that existed in every Plymouth County community, even the coastal ones, when I was a boy. At the state level the unemployment rate is now a nearly non-existent 3.3%, which means that despite the claptrap you will hear from some whose education stopped in the 1960's, anyone who can't find a job in today's Massachusetts needs counselling, not job counselling.

But inevitably there is an environmental downside to all this prosperity. It is a downside that, for one thing, could kill us, for in most of our communities some of us are drinking bad water. Secondly, and here the problem touches the essence of what makes Southeastern Massachusetts special, sprawling development threatens to turn 350-year-old villages ugly forever. That is a possibility that from my personal point of view would be worse than death—I would prefer to drink the cup of hemlock of bad water than see the town I grew up in spoiled in my lifetime. That is perhaps a tad melodramatic, but is not melodramatic to say that Massachusetts is partly losing an environmental battle as we enter 1987, a battle we must win in the next few years or partly lose forever.

In discussing the Massachusetts economy last week, I focused on the governor, and that was appropriate since the business climate in a state is largely set by a governor. But in discussing the environment the focus needs to be broadened: both state and local government play crucial roles in our protection or non-protection. As to state government, we must never forget that the Commonwealth by dint of the effluents its Water Resources Authority puts into Boston Harbor, is the biggest single polluter in the state.

Beyond that criminal distinction, the state is charged with setting overall environmental policy, a charge it has implemented with a standing bureaucracy, the Department of Environmental Affairs. This agency enforces a variety of laws and regulations affecting the environment, and does so, I believe, with some excellent people and with some degree of efficiency. But like all bureaucracies it is too slow in deciding the matters before it, slowness that sometimes annoys the business community without protecting the environment.

A more serious problem with the Department of Environmental Affairs is that as a bureaucracy it is not organized to respond rapidly to changing circumstances. The glory of private enterprise is that in its diffuseness it usually reacts promptly to new demands and changing markets. Not so the agency that ought to be concerned with the downside of prosperity—the threats to our health, to our aquifers, and to our quality of life that are the proper concern of state government. For example, by the time the Department of Environmental Affairs figures out the consequences of rapid development now underway in towns like Pembroke, Hanson, Halifax, Plympton, Carver, Middleborough, and the Bridgewaters, the deed of development will be done and any environmental damage will be virtually irreversible.

As a practical matter, then, much of the responsibility for saving the state's environment must and does devolve to its 351 communities. How are those communities doing with their epochal, and along with the education of our young, their most vital responsibility?

That is a hard question to answer. On the one hand we now have much stricter environmental requirements than we did in the days when, typically, a wetland would be turned into first a dump and then a development. But the tightening of environmental law has not meant, nor will it mean, that either safety or beauty is automatically protected. Some laws written with the best of intentions have been counterproductive to environmental protection. A good example is "cluster zoning," which has been adopted in a number of communities. Under cluster zoning, larger, more concentrated developments are permitted provided they are accompanied by an appropriate amount of open space.

What communities have found is, first, builders have tended to use unbuildable wetland as the designated "open space," making the cluster law in effect nothing more than a loophole in previous zoning by-laws. Secondly, cluster developments tend to involve more earth-moving and therefore more environmental threat than conventional single-home developments. Thirdly, cluster developments typically have a single septic system—a serious potential problem. The authors of cluster zoning apparently failed to appreciate that 80 clustered housing units whose johns drain into a single septic system leeching at a single point is far more menacing to an aquifer than 80 individual houses whose johns drain into 80 cesspools spread over a relatively wide area. On such mundanities will our future health and quality of life depend.

Another unforseen consequence of environmental law is corruption at the local level. Whereas in the past developers could get their building permits as a matter of course, today the process from the builder's point of view is infinitely more difficult. Inevitably some developers are tempted to try "another way" of influencing officials. Inevitably some ethical builders have retired while less scrupulous types, slickers who don't know a hammer from a square, have brought other methods to a once clean industry.

Still another problem is the price of land and the cost of holding it, both of which are so high today that owners are sorely pressed to develop the land they hold even if they do not wish to. An argument can be made that we need to provide much greater incentives for farmers and other landowners to keep their holdings open. But such incentives have a way of becoming welfare for the rich; moreover, there is a need for housing in the state, and the overzealous restriction of development will have the effect of driving up the cost of housing. Such an effect has deleterious consequences for all of society, running straight through the middle class to the poor to the homeless, hurting each cohort in turn.

What we really need is hard to find in the politics of 30-second television news segments:balance.We need to find a balance between our material needs and our need for clean water, clean air, open space, and beauty. In a healthy society there is a proper tension between the competing interests of developers and environmentalists. But in one of the hotter regions of an economically hot state, my fear in 1987 is that too much development is being approved too quickly.

☐ You have often heard that the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina: "It's a long time between drinks." But nobody told you what the Governor of South Carolina said: "And that's because your damned state is dry."

☐ I have met Southerners who are still unreconstructed. Incidentally I could never understand why the Union didn't secede from the South.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

A gallon of laughs

A gathering of concerned citizens discussing the region's water shortage.

Heh, heh, heh . . .

I received a letter the other day — you won't heh, heh, believe it. Ha, ha, ha . . . sorry, it's so funny I can't help laughing. Heh, heh, heh . . . I'll stop, just give me a second, oh, ho, ho.

There! I've stopped now, heh, heh, heh . . .

No, I'm all right now, really. But about this letter. A fellow who claims to be a scientist wrote to tell me that our water supply, heh, heh, is being tampered with, ho, ho, ho. Not that it's undrinkable, he says, it just has an effect similar to — oh, ho, boy! — laughing gas. And listen to this, it only works on us when we talk about — oh, I can't take it — our DWINDLING WATER SUPPLY, HAW, HAW, HAW!

He says that's the reason everybody seems to stand around laughing instead of doing something whenever the subject comes up. He says that's why Marshfield can sit back and watch half its water supply get contaminated and act as if it's watching Saturday Night Live, ha, ha, ha . . .

I don't know about him, but frankly, heh, heh, I find Brockton and Kingston a heluva lot funnier than Marshfield. And THE CAPE! Can you imagine anything funnier than the Cape, haw, haw, haw, going BONE DRY? Ohhh, Lord!

You'd better give me a minute to compose myself.

Heh, heh . . . I'll just have a glass of water.

Nearly Native — by Darrell Berger

'When the choice was clear'

I first heard the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. speak 20 years ago this spring, during my freshman year at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn.

I knew who he was, of course, and vaguely what he represented. Sharing the podium was a senator I knew by name only, South Carolina's Strom Thurmond.

My innocence was so thorough that it barely dawned on me that, when I traveled from Ohio to Tennessee to attend college, that I was going to "the South" and that "the South" was different.

There had been no black students at my high school, no black families in my town. But Nashville seemed to be more black than white, though except for a very few students, the only black people at Vanderbilt worked in the cafeteria or tended the buildings and grounds.

I remember almost nothing of what they said, but the impression lingers.

The difference between King and Thurmond was as different, well, as different as black and white.

Thurmond was old and ugly, his voice an unpleasant rasping, his demeanor reptilean. I recall his appealing to patriotism, but to what ends I forget. His words and gestures seemed unrelated; his movements were still and mechanical. He was cold and hostile.

Wait, I do remember something he said. He said, "We have to rewrite the Constitution the way it was meant to be written."

Dr. King seemed everything Senator Thurmond was not. He was young and virile. His voice was butter and molasses, his face beatific. He appealed to love, common decency and sense to give all people justice and equality.

It was the first time I had heard why racism hurts whites as well as blacks.

He moved like an athlete. He seemed happy and honored to be speaking to us and when he finished I felt blessed.

This must have been what people felt when Jesus spoke, or at least when a prophet appeared.

After that day I had to rethink everything.

Simply, Dr. King seemed like a very good man and Senator Thurmond seemed like a bad man.

King seemed to be telling the truth while Thurmond lied.

Somehow, to my relatively wide-open if not entirely empty 19-year-old mind, it appeared that the two men on the stage represented the extremes of what a man could become.

I didn't exactly declare at that moment to become a minister rather than a senator. But as I followed current events and studied liberal arts, the choices represented by the two men continued to stand before me.

I came to meet many in Nashville who admired Strom Thurmond, or at least sounded like him: professors, white preachers, newspapermen, fellow students. I also met many admirers of Dr. King

My first conclusions about what and whom they represented were validated.

But I have changed in one way. When I was young I couldn't understand how anyone could become as twisted as Strom Thurmond.

Now, 20 years later, I can't understand how anyone could have stayed as true as Martin Luther King.

For I understand now that the world we live in is Strom Thurmond's world. It is only the world of faith and hope, the world of the dream, that is Martin Luther King's.

I noticed that the new Republican governor of Arizona has rescinded the order making King's birthday a state holiday. He cited some legalities, then said he didn't believe King deserved a holiday like Washington and Lincoln.

Frankly, I can't believe his birthday is a national holiday, either. I'm amazed, in fact. I think it's the single most positive symbolic act the government has accomplished in my lifetime.

Public schools have assemblies and read his words. Writers editorialize on his memory. Strom Thurmond gets a day off.

If people want God in the classroom, let God enter through the words of Martin Luther King.

Last summer I watched the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on the confirmation of Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Strom Thurmond was chairman.

Strom Thurmond confirming a Chief Justice that has disapproved of every piece of civil rights legislation in the last 20 years. A perfect match.

I particularly noted the ill humor Thurmond used in questioning representatives of women's and gay rights organizations. Say what you will about him, he is consistent.

I thought of the power Thurmond has maintained, with King now nearly 20 years gone. I thought of what an empty power it is, this power to deny.

For this is what I had witnessed 20 years ago: a struggle between the power to deny and the power to affirm.

Through the years, as I have passed some tests of will and character and failed others, I remember that day when Thurmond and King showed me there were choices to be made.

Young people today can still see Strom Thurmond for themselves. But if we want to show them Martin Luther King, we have to show them by what we give them. What choices will we set before our children today?

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church in Scituate.)

PRAYER THROUGH APPLICATION OF HOLY SPIRIT

Holy Spirit, you who solve all problems, light all roads so that I may attain my goal, you who give me the Divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances of my life you are with me. I want to thank you for all things as you confirm once again that I never want to be separated from you, even and in spite of all material illusion, I wish to be with you in eternal glory. Thank you for your mercy toward me and mine.

The person must say this prayer for 3 consecutive days. After 3 days, the favor requested will be granted even if it may appear difficult. This prayer must be published immediately after the favor is granted without mentioning the favor. Only your initials should appear at the bottom. N.C. (1/14)

From the garden

by Joan Pinkham

In the days when wolves roamed the heaths of England, the ancient Saxons named January's full moon, the Wolf Moon. Another bit of lore passed down from Yankee farmers notes that as the days lengthen, the cold strengthens and so it's with mixed emotions that we learn that by the end of the month, the sun will be rising 14 minutes earlier and setting 35 minutes later.

Birders across the nation rose in the black of night to take part in the annual Audubon Christmas count, avidly seeking out the various species, not just to add to their own life count, but to supply valuable information to scientists interested in determining how the living patterns of birds change.

Here on the South Shore, 101 species were reported including 11,000 common eiders, a Barrow's goldeneye, six rough-legged hawks, a snowy owl, a northern shrike, six Carolina wrens, a winter wren, 45 rusty blackbirds, two eastern meadowlarks, an indigo bunting and a common redpoll.

The most exciting event was at Scituate Lighthouse when a giant white snowy owl was spotted with his head tucked under his four-ft. wing before taking off to search for his favorite snack—rats. Because of a shortage of lemmings in the north, birders are sighting snowy owls along beaches from Plum Island down to Chatham—18 were seen at Boston's Logan Airport.

January is seed catalog time, a time to fantasize about next summer's garden. Darlene Beauvais, horticulturist at Plimoth Plantation for the past six years, is reordering and planning the colony's gardens, as well as her own in Norwell.

She delights in Gertrude Jekyll's books on English gardens and is preparing a course on designing one's herb garden. Rhea Chapman has been poring over the '87 catalog called "Johnny's Selected Seeds," Foss Hill Road, Albion, Me. 04910. It seems to have a wealth of information and seeds that do well in the greenhouse, windowsill, cool weather, as well as those seeds best for beginners and those ranging from new to heirloom varieties, and lots of recipes!

Here in snow country, feeding the birds is important and Tom Oakman advises providing a little fine gravel so they can grind the seeds they eat and also supplying a little water. Bev Litchfield reminds us of the bird seed sale at the Natural Science Center in Norwell Feb 7 and 8. She also reports five purple finches at their feeder, birds which have become all too scarce in the area. They're rosy red and one of many melodious American finches. If well fed they are sturdy enough to live through severe winters and if you supply sunflower seeds, you may be lucky enough to attract them to your feeder.

The Lunchtime Lecture at the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University is scheduled for the 21st at 12:30 in the Hunnewell Visitor Center of the Arboretum, The Arborway, Jamaica Plain. Admission to the lecture on wildflowers is $2, but free to members and senior citizens. Take a sandwich (coffee and tea are provided) and hear David Longland, garden director of the Garden in the Woods of the New England Wildflower Society.

Something new has been added to this year's New England Flower Show, for amateurs are invited to enter the flower design competition.

Mrs. John Bleakie of Cohasset will be judging the entries which will be divided into three classes: "European Elegance," "Exotic Far East" and "The Americas." Mrs. Bleakie advises sending for an entry form for the amateur design competition by writing to the Mass Hort. Society at 300 Huntington Ave. This year's Flower Show will be held March 14-22 at Bay Side Expo and the theme is "Flowers Around the World."

Proving that January is not all snow and ice, Bev Litchfield saw pansies in bloom in a Harwich garden at Christmas-time and a Christmas card from England included a gift of pressed flowers for me. Al wrote: "They were picked on Dec. 12 and should have gone to heaven, or wherever dead flowers go, but it's been such a beautiful end of year the flowers could even have been picked today (22nd.)" Included were marigolds, pansies, lobelia and marguerites.

Scituate seems to be the "in" place for winter birds who enjoy sheltered waters. Those noble birds, whistling swans, were gliding around the reservoir to the right of Rte. 3A last week, while over in the Harbor all sorts of ducks were enjoying the still waters beside the road leading out to Peggotty Beach. Some other special sights to see have been the sunsets over the North River and starting the day with a glimpse of Venus sparkling in southern skies.

It was back in 1950 that Rolf Egan spotted a UFO while talking to a neighbor in his Weymouth back yard. Twice the size of a full moon, perfectly round, bluish grey and moving silently downward to the horizon, it was a sighting later confirmed at Logan Airport. It was also the beginning of research for Egan that led to his hobby of astronomy. Now he is president of the South Shore Astronomical Society and if you care to join their monthly meetings, call him at his home, or the South Shore Natural Science Center where they hold their meetings.

Bringing your garden indoors for the winter is easy if you have a greenhouse, growlights or sunny, glassed-in porch. Darlene Beauvais' greenhouse is colorful with jasmine, camelias, flowering paper whites, scented geraniums and rosemary. Just about now, she is starting some herbs from seed and will start cuttings the beginning of February. Lavalie Hoss has a camelia that is six feet tall, impatiens and primroses that are still blooming from this summer, but her prize is the calla lily, a descendant of a plant once a part of the Lawson Estate greenhouses. Mrs. John Bleakie's sun porch faces south and although she claims to treat her collection casually, "with benign neglect", is actually how she words it, her cymbidium orchids have won her the first prize and Cunningham Bowl at the New England Flower Show. Also flourishing are camelias, hibiscus, a four-foot jade plant acquired in 1937 and geraniums, ivy and ferns.

So. Shore Hospital fundraising drive begins

South Shore Hospital's 1986-87 Annual Appeal is now underway. This year's fund-raising appeal has been mailed to over 25,000 area residents, businesses, former patients and members of the Hospital community seeking funds to remodel, enlarge and add much-needed equipment to the Special Care Nursery.

Last year over 2,000 babies were born at the hospital, making the birthing program one of the largest of any suburban hospital in Massachusetts. While nine out of every ten babies cope very well with birth, it can be full of hazards for those who begin life ill or premature.

Atmosphere, temperature and many other factors must be constantly monitored and controlled for this baby's needs, because he is unable to live in the world as he finds it. The care given the average newborn must be greatly intensified for the baby in distress.

The funds will also be applied toward the purchase of an essential new piece of equipment called a neonatal power column. This unit provides oxygen and suction for newborns and assists in monitoring vital signs. Other equipment needs include a warming bed, isolette and electronic scale.

Renovation of the Special Care Nursery will enable the nursery staff to care for more babies born at the Hospital. It will also provide a great convenience to South Shore area parents in returning their growing preemies closer to home from other intensive care nurseries. Then only seriously ill babies, very small preemies or those requiring major surgery will need to be transferred into Boston.

Donations may be made payable to South Shore Health and Educational Corporation, to the Community Relations Department, South Shore Hospital, 55 Fogg Road, South Weymouth, MA 02190.

Vol. IX, No. 17 | 383-6731/545-7060 | Thursday, January 22, 1987 | 2 Sections | 35 cents

Sewer hearing delayed, private firm hired

The suspended chief operator of the Cohasset wastewater treatment plant, who was awaiting a hearing to determine whether he would continue working for the town, suffered a heart attack Monday morning.

Manuel Salvador of 28 Elm Court, is in the cardiac care unit of the South Shore Hospital. A disciplinary hearing which was to be held by the sewer commission Jan. 27 regarding his employment at the plant, has been temporarily postponed.

The sewer commission voted to suspend the superintendent of the watewater treatment plant because he refused to help staff the plant during a recent emergency.

In a letter to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), sewer commission chairman Charles DeSantis said Manuel Salvador was suspended with pay until Jan. 27 after he "indicated by a note he would not assist" the staffing of the plant on Dec. 22, 1986.

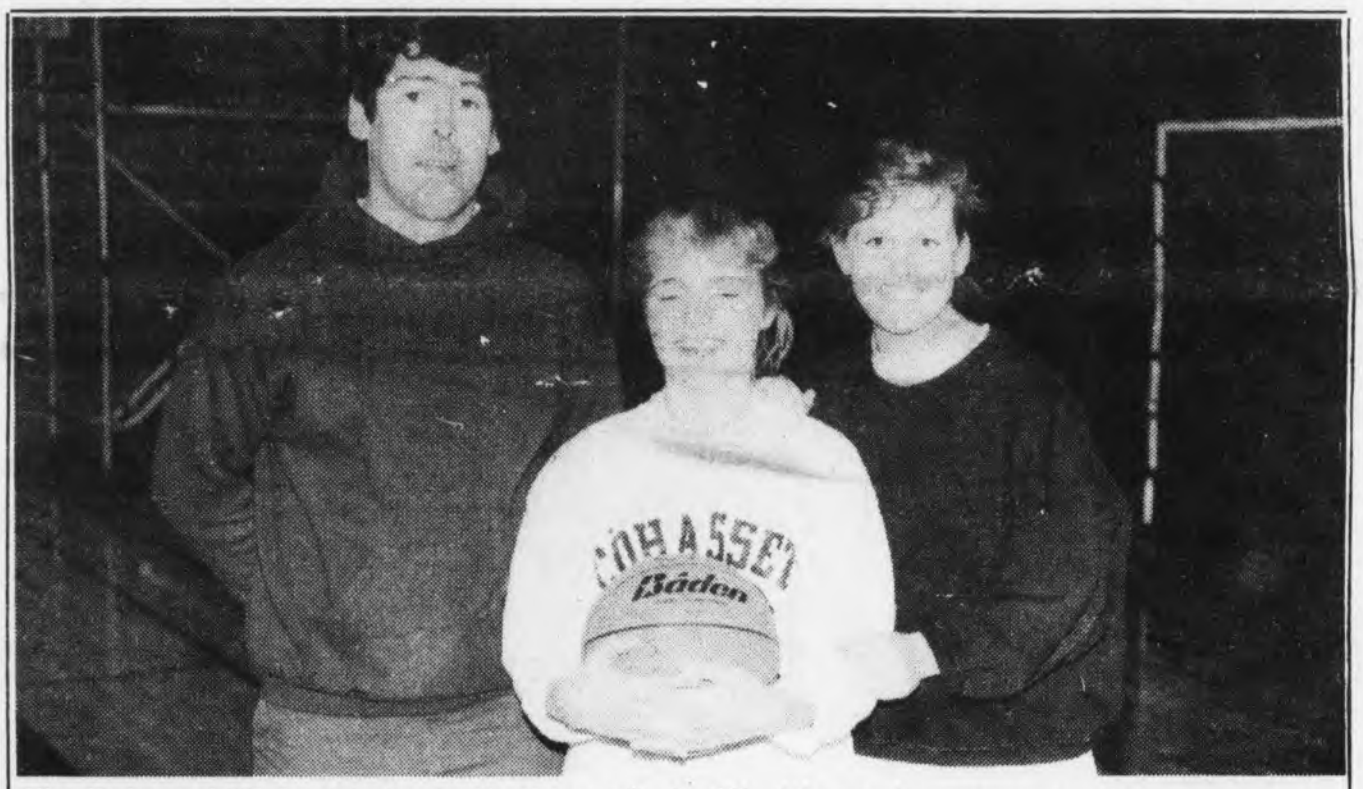
At that time, while Salvador was on vacation, a contracted chief operator was hired to supervise the sewer treatment plant. When he walked off the job Dec.22, Salvador indicated by a note he would not help staff the abandoned plant, DeSantis stated.

Consequently, DeSantis said, the commission engaged the services of York Water Consultants Inc., a firm which specializes in providing a complete line of contract operations and maintenance for wastewater treatment plants for municipalities.

The commission originally scheduled a hearing Jan. 27 at which time the commission was to determine what action, if any, would be taken regarding the Salvador matter.

DeSantis wrote the letter to DEQE explaining that because of the emergency nature of their initial contact with YWC, they were unable to submit a contract of the services to DEQE. The state must review all such private contracts. Since receiving the proposal from YWC, the commission has sent a copy to the state for their review and approval.

The sewer commission decided Tuesday to accept YWC services for five months, from February 1 through June 30.



The company will be paid $8,750 per month over the five month period. If the commission is satisfied with York's performance through April, DeSantis said negotiations will begin with regard to a long-term contract.

He estimated, there will be an annual savings of about $20,000 if York stays on at the treatment plant.

The agreement between the sewer commission and YWC is contingent on a positive review by town counsel. DeSantis said he expects the legalese to be worked out post haste.

Look out, Cruisers, here comes a league leader!

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The Cohasset High girls basketball team looks like it's on the way to another league title. That's due, at least in part, by the efforts of Coach Bill Fallon, and co-captains Maria Cahill and Maureen O'Leary. (John Magadieu)

They're on their way to the state tournament, carrying a possible league title upon their shoulders. Yet the girls' basketball team has never rivaled the boys for the amount of attention and publicity.

In the words of varsity coach Bill Fallon, "At times they've been a bit disappointed. But over the past six years, they've become the most successful sports program at Cohasset High School. They realize, without the publicity, that they're doing well."

Earlier this week, their record stood at 9-1 with ten games remaining in the 1987 season. They had two games scheduled this week against Whitman and Abington. Should they win those two games, Cohasset is all but assured the league title.

"We're the same as we were last year," Coach Fallon estimated, noting that the CHS girls' team has competed in the state tournament the past three years, winning at least 13 games a season for the past five years.

But this, he said without hesitation and with perhaps a hint of prophesy, could be the year for the girls varsity team. This could the year Cohasset grabs it all, including a state title.

Last year, the girls lost in the quarterfinals of the state tournament. The year before, they lost a heart-breaker in the finals when they were outscored by one point.

"This team," Coach Fallon stated, "is very similar to the 1984 team. I think we're better defensively than that team, and perhaps we're not quite as good offensively. This team has got a good mix of inside and outside play, which makes it difficult to set up a defense against us. But more importantly, our defense has improved a lot since last year. We're holding our opponents to an average of 33 points a game which has helped us quite a bit."

The seven-year varsity coach acknowledged the girls have consistently received less fanfare than their male counterparts. But, "we're not overly concerned about that," he said. "They go out on the court and do what has to be done and they do it well."

He speculated that this team is consistently good because of their background and experience. The individual members have each attended summer basketball camps including summer and youth leagues. "That's been a big part of our program here, he noted. "I think it's kept us competitive. There's also a lot of parental involvement in this town."

Once the Cohasset girls obtain a berth in the state tournament, Fallon said their next goal will be to "do the best we can. A lot of the time, the best team in the state doesn't win the title. We have never set our goal

Herbert Jason

A tale of 55 years at sea

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In his 55 years as a Cohasset fisherman, Herbert Jason has fought off boat wrecks, competition and marina proposals. He is a survivor.

"You only get out of it what you put into it," he said of his lobsterman's life. "It's hard work. And today, it's expensive; the prices for parts and equipment have skyrocketed. Everything is electronics."

A 36-foot boat costs about $80,000 now, while a 45-footer, the biggest allowed in Cohasset Harbor costs about $125,000.

Despite the costs, Jason noted, "Fishing is very competitive today.

"In the old days," he said, "you could find a piece of bottom and catch lobsters for weeks at a time. Today, you have to keep on the move and other boats stick with you."

Local lobstermen also have become concerned about the proliferation of dragging vessels, ships which sweep the ocean floor with nets.

"When they get hard pressed for finned-fish," Jason said, "they take to the lobsters and drag up our gear."

He noted, the state has held a number of conflict meetings. The problems caused by both the reduction in numbers of fish and the expansion of the fishing industry, have led fishermen to the statehouse.

While the lobstermen have a good relationship with the members of the Massachusetts Inshore Draggers Association (MIDA), Jason said, "renegades come in and do the harm."

"Lobster fishermen feel that dragging hurts the bottom," he said. "It has been said, four out of five lobsters get crushed in the net. There's a lot of destruction there."

He explained, "In the late fall, lobsters move into

McNabb moves

John K. McNabb Jr., a member and chairman of the Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government, and the Board of Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, resigned from those two boards.

Although speculated to be a candidate for a seat on the board of selectmen, McNabb will be moving to Boston. He is studying for a master's degree.

Hazardous sites named

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) has released a list of the harzardous waste sites located in Cohasset. All the cited locations are being or have been cleaned up under the state's supervision.

The list of local hazardous waste sites was compiled by DEQE as mandated by question four of the November election referendum.

DEQE stated that Webb-Norfolk Conveyor has been cleaned and no further is action is necessary. According to Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, several years ago, several barrels were found buried on the propert and the groundwater surrounding the barrels was contaminated. A septic system which was found to be inefficient was repaired and the soil was removed. According to Dr. Godzik, "the books have been closed on that one."

A second site, J. J. Henry at 430 South Main Street, is almost cleaned after a March heating oil spill on the property. A leaky storage tank was found there during a fire and an underground tank was also ordered removed from the property.

A third potential location cited by the state was Highway Motors, 827 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. According to ther DEQE there is nothing now to substantiate whether there is a hazardous waste problem on the site, but it is a property called to the attention of the state.

Dr. Godzik noted that a few months ago storage tanks were removed from the site, leaving indication there was some leakage from the tank. There is a common occurrence, he said, which has happened recently at Hugo's and at the Art Center' new location.

A spokesman for DEQE said the property is listed as a potential site to be investigated. "These are sites we know little about," DEQE spokesman John Creed said. "People may have called the state about the site, and by law we must list it as a potential hazardous site."

This often occurrs during a real estate transaction, he said. Highway Motors was recently sold to a Maserati dealership.

Amended Ward plan

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce announced its three nominees for the annual Forrest King award.

Andrea Merrill, Wayne Sawchuk and Richard Straley were each nominated in appreciation for their outstanding service to the community.

The award will honor the chamber member who "best exemplifies the goals and standards of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and of the late Forrest King, owner of King Jewlers."

Ballots were mailed to all chamber members for a secret vote, and the winner will be presented the award at a banquet to be held at Kimball's by the Sea, Feb. 18.

IEP to study harbor

Selectmen selected the low bidder Tuesday, to perform a cleanup study of Little Harbor.

I.E.P. was chosen because of its experience, its presentation to the board, and its low bid of $38,608.

The company will seek a solution to the algae problem which afflicts Little Harbor.

"I was impressed with their ability to explain what they're going to do," Selectman James Gallagher commented. "It was a very educational presentation."

Board chairman Diane Sullivan agreed. "They were all well qualified, but in the case of I.E.P., their experience in this area is second to none."

I.E.P. received six good recommendations, according to selectmen, including good marks from towns with similar size and scope to Cohasset.

"The only thing that concerned me," Sullivan said, "is that they projected completion time for the study at 22 months, where others were estimating 15 months.

"I.E.P's projection was still within the state regulation of 24 months," she added, "so I guess that will be okay."

The board's 3-0 votefor I.E.P. is subject to the approval of the state Water Pollution Control Division.

Milliken Field requests

Cohasset voters will have two chances to pass or reject a proposal to refurbish Milliken Field this year.

Selectmen voted Tuesday to include the item on warrants for both the Annual Town Meeting and the Special Town Meeting, which will be held April 4.

Board chairman Diane Sullivan went along with the placement of the Milliken Field item on the Special Town Meeting warrant, but she was adamantly opposed to allowing the article appear on both warrants.

"This really ticks me off," she told her colleagues, Laugelle and Gallagher. "This way, if it fails the first time, you can go try again; I think that's dirty pool.

"It's a maneuver," she said emphatically. "It shouldn't be done."

Sullivan argued, the board agreed the Milliken Field proposal is the board's "lowest priority item."

Neither Laugelle nor Gallagher disputed her arguments, but they indicated their support of the proposal.

"I support it; I signed the petition," Laugelle said.

In another playing field action, John Kinchla of Beechwood Street presented the board members with a petition to include an article on the Annual Town Meeting warrant.

Kinchla and the Cohasset Soccer Boosters are interested in putting one or two soccer fields on a parcel of town-owned land adjacent to the little league field on South main Street.

"It's permeable and would make an excellent site for soccer fields," Kinchla said.

"This is not to take the wind out of the sails of those who want to do something at the high school," he added; "this would be primarily for children six to 19 years old."

While Gallagher and Laugelle signed Kinchla's petition, Sullivan questioned whether the parcel is within the watershed.

She noted, the town would not lease the land for such a purpose because of the liability factor. Kinchla told the board, the boosters has an insurance program which would cover such activity.

Land bank article backed

The selectmen agreed to back a land bank warrant for the Annual Town Meeting, April 4.

A previous attempt at land banking by state statute called for a two percent government grab of real estate transactions, for the purpose of acquiring open space.

"I think two percent is kind of high," said Diane Sullivan, board chairman.

A two percent take on the sale of a $300,000 house, would net the town $6,000.

"I could support a one-half percent lot of funds going to this," Sullivan said.

The board left open the question of percentages, but voted 3-0 to back land banking in Cohasset.

Cohasset commissioners against boating on reservoir

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Swimming and boating could come to Wompatuck State Park if state Department of Environmental Management recommendations are approved, a DEM planner said last week.

A three-acre swimming pond could be constructed at the campsite at the park by 1990 if the state approves money for the project, DEM planner Jack Lash said at the Wompatuck State Park Advisory Council Jan. 15.

Also, construction of a parking area and either a boat launch or an embankment to allow canoes and rowboats access to Cohasset Reservoir could begin this year, Lash said.

"The swimming pond is a several year project," said Lash. "We're at the stage now where we have to have our engineers come in and study it, and we have to request funding.

"We hope by the late 1980s—1988 or 1989—that construction can begin," he said. "It's a project the DEM commissioner is very high on."

Lash presented a map to the committee showing the proposed pond's location, near the middle of the camping area in the park. He said the site was selected after several field visits and studies of topographic maps.

Campers said in surveys in 1980 and 1985 that swimming was the one activity missing at the park that would bring them back for another visit.

"A swimming pond is the big clincher in turning the park around in attendance and use," said Lash. "We're finally responding to the camper surveys."

Lash said the DEM is studying whether the proposed pond would be open for day users or only for groups which aquire a permit. Parking and traffic issues have to be studied to determine if the park could handle a pond open to individuals who would come to the park only to swim.

If the pond is constructed, the park would lose approximately 30 of the 400 campsites presently in the park. Park Supervisor Robert MacKenzie said 225 campsites are open now, and that around 150 of the sites are filled during the park's busiest weekends, the Memorial Day and Fourth of July holidays.

The proposal to for non-motorized boats and fishing on the Cohasset Reservoir includes building a parking lot and either a boat ramp or an area for easily placing boats in the water at a site near where the old Beechwood Street meets the reservoir inside the park.

The DEM has an agreement with the town of Cohasset that allows non-motorized boats on the reservoir but prohibits swimming.

Ron Goodwin of the Cohasset Water Commission told the advisory council his board is against a boat ramp at the reservoir.

"By putting a boat ramp in without having a swimming pond built you could encourage people to swim," he said, "and there's the danger of cars that close to the reservoir contaminating it.

"The other two commissioners are against any activity on the reservior," said Goodwin. "They'd like to see a 10-foot barbed wire fence around the whole thing."

Lash said the DEM has not definitely decided to build a boat ramp.

"The boat ramp is not a given," he said. "We could create an embankment so people could carry boats and easily drop them in the water."

Goodwin also said his commission is worried about proper supervision on the reservoir, and asked that any parking lot plans include a drainage system to carry water runoff away from the reservoir.

The DEM is in the process of completing a management plan for the park that will include the swimming pond and boating proposals. A public hearing on the plan will held probably in March, Lash said.

Before any changes can be made in the park, a traffic impact study on the areas surrounding the park must be completed, Lash said.

The DEM has $65,000 budgeted for the study, and will be seeking bids from consultants in the next few weeks.

The study will take place this summer and include traffic counts on Free Street in Hingham, the main road leading to the park entrance. Also, the consultant will study whether a second park entrance is needed if swimming and boating is offered in the park.

Advisory council member Jeff Volpe of Norwell noted that motorists could use park roads as a shortcut if a second entrance is opened. Lash said controlling traffic into the park would be necessary if a second entrance were opened.

Residents complain about bottled apple juice

The federal Food and Drug Administration is investigating complaints from local residents about tainted apple juice, according to Louis Gershman, FDA acting district director for New England.

Quart and half-gallon bottles of Purity Supreme brand apple juice, shipped about two weeks ago from an unidentified packer, have been removed from the shelves of the Hingham Angelo's in Lincoln Plaza, according to the store manager who asked not to be named. He added that the store was stocking a different brand pending test results but that he had received no customer complaints.

Bottles from the same batch have also been taken from sales areas in the Marshfield Angelo's and there is some indication that all Purity Supreme brand apple juice from a specific shipment has been recalled from the 18 Angelo's markets, including the Scituate store on Front Street.

Also, all half-gallon and gallon jars of Stop and Shop brand apple juice shipped from the Old Dutch Company in Greenville, N.H. have been removed from the 112 Stop and Shop stores in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, said David Small, director of technical affairs for Stop and Shop Cos., Inc. in Quincy.

The grocery manager of the Cohasset Stop and Shop on Route 3A, who also declined to be indentified, said he knew of no complaints that had come to the store.

Deena Beals of Marshfield returned a half-gallon bottle of apple juice to the Marshfield Angelo's on Saturday, January 18.

"The juice smelled and tasted like kerosene," Beals told the Mariner Tuesday.

Michael Mahoney, director of media relations for Purity Supreme, in Billerica, which owns Angelo's supermarkets, said, "We have replaced the shipment with fresh product."

Mahoney said Purity Supreme tests done on the juice returned by Beals, "showed no contaminants but did have an off smell."

"We have stopped doing business with the New Hampshire packer until tests on the product have been completed," Small added.

Mahoney said he did not know what packer had shipped the juice for Purity Supreme.

Gershman said the FDA had received complaints on half-gallon jars of apple juice bought at the Pembroke Super Stop and Shop, from a DeMoulas market in Andover and a Shaw's Supermarket in North Dartmouth. No complaints came to the FDA about the Angelo's juice, he added.

The call from Pembroke about the Stop and Shop brand was made on Dec. 29; the complaint about the DeMoulas brand bottle was made on Jan. 9; and the Food Club brand bottle from Shaw's was reported Jan. 14.

The FDA has sent an investigator to New Hampshire to test the juice packing procedures at the Old Dutch plant, Gershman reported.

"The test results on closed bottles of juice at the stores from the Old Dutch Company have "been clean, Gershman said. "The one open bottle from Pembroke that we tested had what we call a musty smell."

Gershman said the FDA performed "organoleptic" tests on the juice. "In other words, we smelled them," he continued.

No chemical analysis has been done, he said, "and might not be."

No illnesses have been reported in connection with the consumption of the juice, according to the FDA.

South Shore Coalition to study traffic problems

By Paula J. Lobo
Mariner correspondent

New officers and a new transportation subcommittee were the result of the year's first South Shore Coalition meeting in Hull Town Hall Jan. 15.

By raising her hand at the last instant, Hanover Selectman Janet W. O'Brien obtained a one-vote margin to become the 18-month-old organization's first chairman.

She defeated Hull Selectman John Silva, who was then elected vice chairman. Selectman Gerald Dwight of Scituate, who was not present at the meeting, was unanimously elected clerk, the third elective office provided by the coalition's recently adopted by-laws.

O'Brien hailed the spirit of cooperation which has marked the 10-town organization since its creation in 1985 under a state incentive aid grant administered by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC). The coalition will continue rotating meetings among the member towns.

"I'm very excited about the kind of effort I've seen here," O'Brien said.

"Traditionally, the South Shore towns have been very independent. This represents the first time they've come together in cooperation. These are people who want to work together. They realize that problems don't stop at the town borders."

Among those problems is transportation, graphically illustrated at the meeting in a presentation by members of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works (DPW) and the consulting firm of Edwards and Kelcey, which is conducting an environmental impact study prior to the proposed widening of Route 3.

The group heard, while the population growth rate in the coalition towns is relatively flat, traffic congestion is increasing because the towns are located on a path between Boston and the Cape Cod-Plymouth area.

"And they have to go through us to get there," commented Selectman James Finucane of Marshfield.

Robert Lapsley of the DPW said that an environmental impact statement is due "in a couple of months" on the planned widening of a 12-mile stretch of Route 3 from Weymouth to Duxbury. The study will assess the impact of improvements on such conditions as noise, air quality and water supplies.

Robert Joseph of Edwards and Kelcey said plans now call for additional travel and breakdown lanes to be carved out of the current 100-foot-wide median. Interchanges will be "improved," he said, but not expanded, as that would require additional land.

Traffic-count projections at several locations will have to be revised, Joseph said, because in some cases traffic volume has already exceeded the level predicted in the year 2010.

On a motion by Norwell Planning Board member James Fuda, the coalition voted unanimously to establish a transportation subcommittee to monitor the widening project and other transportation concerns.

Members discussed their relationship with the MAPC, which provides staff assistance, including the services of Project Manager Jean H. Christensen. Member towns will be asked to provide interim funding when their grant runs out.

Rev. Ritts at Second Congregational Church

The Reverend Gary A. Ritts, called by the Second Congregational Church to be its new minister, will be welcomed by the congregation and lead his first worship service here Sunday, Feb. 1.

Rev. Ritts becomes the 17th full-time minister of the church since its founding in 1824. He succeeds the Reverend John M. Benbow, who resigned a year ago after 13 years' service here to accept a call to the First Congregational Church in Milton.

A third generation minister, Mr. Ritts, 37, has more than 15 years' experience in ministry and Christian education leadership. He comes to Cohasset after five years as associate minister of the Greenfield Hill Congregational Church in Fairfield, Conn.

An Illinois native, Mr. Ritts holds a bachelor of arts degree from Ohio University and a master of divinity degree from the Iliff School of Theology, Denver. He has begun doctoral studies at the Boston School of Theology.

While an undergraduate, Mr. Ritts served as a student pastor at a Glouster, Ohio, church and, during his theological studies, as Director of Christian Education at a church in Denver. Subsequently, he served as minister of a circuit of churches in Amanda, Ohio, minister of the Annisquam Village Church in Gloucester, Mass., and associate minister of the First United Methodist Church, Newark, Ohio.

His wife, Judy, also holds a bachelor of arts degree from Ohio University and has completed postgraduate work and certification in the field of learning disabilities. They have two children, Steven, 14, and Allison, 8. The family will live in the church's parsonage on Red Gate Lane.

A formal installation service and community reception will be held at a date to be announced.

Sectional Special Olympics foster confidence

Ask anyone involved in this week's Special Olympics and they'll tell you it's a lot of work. It's also a lot of fun.

From the skaters, to their trainers, to the coordinators, to the program director - the annual Special Olympic games are the culmination of endless energy and tireless efforts on the part of hundreds. But to see a smile on the face of just one Special Needs athlete is to know that hard work is not accomplished in vain.

This past Monday, the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham hosted the Sectional competition for the Massachusetts Special Olympics. Student athletes from area schools participated in speed and figure skating competitions.

As family members crouched in anxious anticipation, yelling words of encouragement to their favorite skater, volunteers waded through the crowds, attempting to organize the next event.

The Special Olympic games exist, according to one area coordinator, to bolster egos as well as muscles .

Joan Shanahan is the training coordinator for the regional sectionals for the winter Olympics. A staff member of the Pilgrim Area Collaborative in Marshfield, she is responsible for knowing which athletes from where will be participating in the competition. About 40 youngsters from throughout Plymouth County competed in Monday's event. They include children from Plymouth and Norfolk counties, Middlesex County, the Cape and the Islands. From this qualifying round, a smaller group of athletes will proceed to the state finals in February in Lenox.

"The kids like this as much for the friends they meet as the competition," Shanahan said. "And they love going to Lenox because that's a three-day event and they get to stay with all their friends. They all love that."

The events in Monday's competition included gliding for distance, a ten-meter skate, 100, 300 and 800-meter speed skating, and level one and two figure skating for several age levels. Those qualifying for the state tournament will participate with about 500 other athletes and coaches.

The athletes train vigorously for the competition, according to Shanahan. The amount of training is dependent on the individual school, but many students begin their workouts several months before the January competition. There is at least six weeks preparation for this one-on-one skating contest, she said.

There are a number of volunteers behind the scenes of a Special Olympics event, she explained. Just to help the athletes get onto the ice and into the correct starting position may take a few able-skaters. An encouraging word from the adults on the ice is frequently needed to boost disappointed spirits and sagging skates.

But an athlete is also encouraged to continue, to pass the finish line, no matter the time. No race will conclude until the two participants have crossed that marker. Shouts of encouragement, as well as demonstrations on how to raise one from a fallen position, are frequent gestures seen on the ice.

But the volunteers are not only numbered among those present on the ice. Burger King in Hingham donated the day's luncheon for all athletes and their families. Coca-Cola donated the day's liquid refreshments. And the Hingham firefighters provided EMT stand-by assistance throughout the day.

"And we even received a real good break on the rental of the rink for today," Shanahan said. "The people here have been very helpful to us."

The day began at 9 a.m. Monday with the traditional torch lighting. This was accomplished by Olympian athlete Jay Nothnagle of Cohasset. Sen. William Golden provided the audience with a brief introduction, and following the invocation, the games began.

Shanahan, who was in the midst of the activity-organizing the racers into proper age groups, acknowledged the event could not be accomplished without the numerous volunteer staff members and parents. Some of those volunteers included Claudia Henning of Cohasset, Ivy Metheny of Pembroke, and Pat Pollino of East Bridgewater. She is associated with the Plymouth Home National Bank, a Conifer Group, which donates $8,000 annually to the county Special Olympics programs.

"We have volunteers here from hockey teams, from college, skating clubs and families," Shanahan said. "They help out as runners and assist the kids on the ice. They do just about anything that has to be done."

The training coordinator said the Special Olympians enjoy the comraderie of the competition - something they look forward to throughout the year. "And they're very, very proud of their accomplishments," she added. "They know they have to train very hard, and they love that. They look forward to this, knowing they're going to be among the friends they made here last year."

The parents, she said, feel an obligation to assist their Special Needs youngsters as much as their siblings. "They realize it's just as important to them as it is to their other children. And their involvement in athletics keeps the youngster active," Shanahan noted.

"For the student, athletics provide a sense of accomplishment. This is something they have learned that they will take with them the rest of their lives. They can join bowling leagues as adults, or swim, or go skating. It's great preparation for the leisure time they will have ahead in their lives."

And for Shanahan, who never was without interruption throughout the day last Monday, the Special Olympics is another chance for her to help. "I love it," she beamed. "Usually in a skating rink, you see the youth leagues, or the school hockey teams, or the men's league. There has to be someone to be involved for these kids. Today, this rink is theirs."

Workshop for cancer patients and families

South Shore residents are invited on Saturday, Jan. 31, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. to the United Church of Christ in Norwell where Marilyn Vickery, R.N., Ph.D., will conduct a workshop for cancer patients, their families, and other interested persons.

Dr. Vickery is a registered nurse, a registered and certified nutritionist, and a counselor in private practice in Holden. She works in direct consultation with physicians, and aids in the care of severely, chronically, or terminally ill patients. For the past three years, she has been in remission from pancreatic cancer. ☐ Michael K. Keller of Border Street has been selected for the Admiral's List at Massachusetts Maritime Academy as the result of his academic achievements during the first semester.

☐ A lot of skaters are certainly excited this week, and with good reason! The Cohasset Winter Garden ISIA skating team leaves for Lake Placid today, for the largest Eastern Territory Competition. They will be competing against skaters from all over and they all have their own productions worked out.The winners go on to the Nationals, there are sure to be a lot from our town. The ISIA team have promised to give us the results as soon as they return which will be on Jan. 25. So watch for them!

☐ And, the skating portion of the Winter Special Olympics was held this week at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. There will be a five member team competing for medals in speed and obstacle skating. Jay Nothnagle, Peter Plante, and Ryan Wiggs represented the Cohasset contingent, and we sure hope that all went well! With all of the enthusiasm that abounds between the skaters and their coaches, they are sure to be a success.

☐ Congratulations to Kathleen S. Edwards of 25 Norfolk Road, one of the local residents that recently passed the Massachusetts Bar Exam.

☐ Made an error on the time of the Red Cross Bloodmobile that is to be held on Jan. 27. The time should have read 2:30 until 7:30, so that all of the commuters can take advantage of this time to donate.

☐ Robert J. Tis was recently re-elected to the Board of Directors of Jordan Health Systems, Inc., and Jordan Hospital at the annual meeting of the hospital corporation. He was also elected secretary of the Board.

☐ The Cohasset Community Center will hold its annual dance on Feb. 6, more details will follow. Just set aside the date now, so that you won't miss it.

☐ Speaking of the Community Center, there are a lot of little folks that are upset there. . .It seems that someone stole the rabbit that lives in the little hutch there. The kids love to check on him, feed him and just watch him! So you can understand how much one little rabbit can be missed! It seems the same thing happened two years ago, and the little guy was returned. So, if anyone knows anything about the missing pet, let the Center know. Or, just return it back to its home, there won't be any questions asked, and it sure would please a lot of kids.

☐ Sure is nice to hear that Priscilla Dresser is home after her recent hospitalization, hope you feel better with each day!

☐ Hope you had a chance to view Aaron, Taryn and Ryan Sawchuck's masterpiece (in the form of a huge snowman), it sure was a grand "Frosty".

☐ In case you haven't heard about it, be sure that you save your egg cartons. The kindergarten class, Mrs. Davis's, needs 800 egg cartons, either pink, green, yellow or blue, can be used. Maybe if you donate one or two you can find out what they plan to do with all 800 of them!

☐ Sandra Dunn, Meredith Deveney, Tracy Lowenhagen, Jenna Emmons, Elizabeth Zadel, Alexandra Redfield, Dudley Bryon and Marlisa Clapp all have artwork entered in the Boston Regional Preliminary of the Boston Globe Scholastic Art Awards. Jan. 18-26 are the dates that the exhibition will be held, then they go on to Boston for further judging resulting in the Blue Ribbon winners. Sure is a tribute to our students to have so many entries of artwork in this event!

They would like to extend an invitation to you if you are a newcomer in Cohasset or Scituate. She has also attained an overall G.P.A. of 3.68 out of a possible 4.0.

Elderly care options are greater than in yesteryear

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The health care industry will blast off as the baby boomers grow gray, Ken O'Grady told the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Jan. 14.

As administrator of Cohasset Knoll Facilicare, O'Grady said he foresees an explosion in the elderly population, and despite a negative historical image, nursing homes are here to stay.

"Nursing homes have been burdened throughout their history with a negative image," he said, "and the negative connotations associated with the words 'nursing home,' in large part stem from the origins of the institution."

O'Grady explained, "The forerunners of today's nursing homes were the rural poor farms, urban flop houses and sanitoriums." These facilities served mainly the destitute, and had no guidelines of care.

"It was a collective living arrangement," he noted, "but there were no restrictions or goals for care. Most of these facilities had a poor track record."

Many regulations were ushered in during the 1960s and 1970s, he said. But modern nursing homes are still struggling to boost the nursing home image.

O'Grady noted, there are several different options for care from which the elderly can choose nowadays.

"A person's medical needs should determine whether he should be hospitalized, or what degree of nursing home care he should receive," he said. "If you're in for hip therapy, you don't want to be put in a room with someone who has no hope of going home."

There are four levels of care, he added. On one end of the spectrum, hospitals and convalescent homes have merged to provide medical care and therapy to the chronically ill. On the other end, there are rest homes which provide minimal care, a nurse and maybe one meal.

Intermediate, individualized care is designed for those afflicted with such maladies as the early stages of alzheimers, while skilled nursing facilities aid the more seriously ill.

Cohasset Knoll is a skilled nursing facility, offering special services such as rehabilitation, physical therapy and occupational therapy.

The Cohasset facility, which provides care for 80 people serves "some very sick patients," O'Grady said. "It's not a place anybody wants to come to, but it stays full."

For the well elderly, he noted, continual care retirement communities are gaining in popularity. In such an arrangement, a group bands together and combines assets to benefit the collective community.

"It's to the point," O'Grady said, "where people who are admitted don't want to show any signs of illness, such as a wheelchair.

"Instead," he explained, "residents participate on the facility governing board. They get involved.

As in much of life, O'Grady told the chamber audience, "money will dictate the choices in care available to the burgeoning elderly population. Private enterprise will determine the restrictions and the course of health care."

The flip side of that equation is that medicare covers very little of what goes into big time care, he said. Much of the rest is picked up by medicaid; however getting medicaid forces a hospitalized person to eliminate all his assets.

"To get coverage of $2,000 to $4,000 per month, that puts a serious burden on families," he said. "It's unfair in some ways.

"It's tough on families anyway," O'Grady said. "Either they go through a lot of stress in trying to care for a person at home, or they suffer a lot of guilt in admitting a loved one into an institution, feeling they are putting the person out of their lives. It's especially hard if the mother or father doesn't want to be put in a nursing home."

The institutions have a long way to go to make up for past problems, he added. They have received bad press for things such as keeping people in restraints unnecessarily.

"The bad press has not necessarily been a bad thing," he noted; "it has led to oversight and improvements."

"Nursing homes are here to stay," O'Grady said. "We need to go farther to make them better. It will take a combined effort from operators, families and residents.

"They have come a long way," he said, "and consumers will dictate where it goes. Very positive aspects result when everyone works together."

Reserve sewer service area in new plan

The sewer commission has submitted an amended sewer facilities plan to the state, including a reserve sewer service area in this latest document.

The reserve service area, which must be approved by a two-thirds vote of town meeting, would include Brewster Road, Ledgewood Drive, Ledge Way, Woodland Drive and Chief Justice Cushing Highway from Brewster Road to Beechwood Street.

According to the letter sent by the commission to the state Division of Water Pollution Control, the reserve area may only be sewered after the completion of phases one and two of the amended Ward Plan, and only if approved by town meeting.

The commission has asked to reserve space within the April town meeting warrant to include a vote on this amended sewer facilities plan. The commission has also asked the DWPC to approve the document.

The town's sewer service area, according to this latest document, includes the expanded sewer service area which was approved last year by town meeting. That will be completed in two phases, five years apart.

Another provision of the revised plan states that the force main will be rerouted at least 400 feet away from the town wells along the railroad bed. This will be accomplished, despite the fact that the force main is essentially "armor-plated," sewer commission chairman Charles DeSantis noted. The plan also provides that the state must work with the town and its engineers to provide grant funding for the design of generic on-site systems.

Town meeting in June, 1984, appropriated $150,000 for the construction of a sewer facilities plan. That money is still awaiting the state's approval of the amended Ward plan.

Editorial

What happened?

This is a small town, and in small towns little events are magnified to greater importance. Big issues often become critical to our daily lives.

Suspending the operator of a sewer treatment plant in some cities and towns may be of no consequence to anyone in that community except the employee. But here in Cohasset, it takes on greater proportions. Other town employees talk about his treatment by his employers, neighbors think about his future. We all feel concern because Manny Salvador has been for many years, a part of our small town life.

It's difficult for any local board, in this case commission, to suspend a town employee. It's done right under the nose and eyes of the community, with everyone watching. In that way, it's different from a private company that does not constantly need to watch its step before proceeding.

But this is the way a municipality functions - under the daily scrutiny of the people who pay to operate it. Any decisions must be made with the knowledge that the townspeople will be following closely.

We do not know exactly why the commission decided to suspend Manny. It's no secret he and the commission members have not seen eye-to-eye on several issues, particularly the Ward sewer plan.

But the commissioners obviously had in mind for several months the idea of relieving Manny and hiring a private firm to operate the plant. The reasons for the move, they say, are primarily the increased efficiency and the reliability.

Dealing with a contracted firm is sometimes less abrasive than dealing with personalities. You can cut short a contract. Firing a longtime employee is painful.

Perhaps we have no business commenting on an issue that is not totally out before the public. But we note that whatever Manny has done to warrant such drastic action should be made public. After a man spends more than 16 years at his job, his employees, the townspeople of Cohasset, have a right to know why his employment is in jeopardy.

We can't say at this point whether the sewer commissioners are right or wrong in their judgement. We hope that a middle ground can be attained, although that looks far from probable.

The commission has agreed to a contract that will continue through June, 1987. After that, they'll be looking at a proposed five-year plan with York Water Consultants, Inc. That doesn't bode well for Manny.

In the meantime, his disciplinary hearing has been postponed while he recovers from his latest setback, a heart attack which occurred earlier this week.

We wish Manny a quick recovery. We hope he comes back soon, demanding that the townspeople be told the reasons for his suspension and impending termination as the town's longtime treatment plant operator.

That's what Manny is owed, and that's what the taxpayers of this town deserve.

Student concerned about school VCR use

Letters

(Editor's Note: The following letter was sent to the South Shore Regional school committee from a student at the South Shore Vo-Tech School in Hanover.)

The illiteracy problem begins in the schools with new forms of education that focus on audio visual equipment instead of reading. I like to call this form of education T.V. education.

According to the 1983 Neilsen report, preschool children watch more television than any other age group. The greater part of their day is spent watching television. Some surveys suggest that up to 54 hours a week are spent watching television by this age group.

Now, with the use of video-cassette recorders in schools, television becomes a form of education. VCRs have made it easier for teachers; a video tape on the subject of the class may take up the whole class period. In some classes, reading is replaced by the VCR, especially in the high schools. For example, in a literature class, a play that might have been read in the class years ago may now be watched on a video tape, or in a history class, instead of reading a book, the class may watch a taped documentary on the subject the class is covering.

The problem with this form of T.V. education, is that not only does it eliminate the need for reading, but also the need for thinking because the story or subject is already thought out by the director, the actors, the playwrights, or the newscast. The ability to develop a point of view is lost because the student will see it the way it already has been interpreted.

Also, the VCR will keep playing even if the student is not paying attention or is confused about something in the class. Television is too broad. It is also informative but the information does not stick. Imagination is replaced by images.

Television has become a way of life for the American. Children are brought up with it and find it entertaining. Many of today's students would find themselves bored with an entire class of reading, or in fact, any reading at all. Today there are two types of illiterates: those who cannot read and those who do not read. Many people today do not read because they don't want to; they have become adapted, and addicted to television.

I feel television has a role to play, but not in education. It would be nice if, in the future, less time would be spent with television and more time spent on reading in class. If students do not read in class, will they read at all?

I would not go so far as to say that illiteracy could be cured by eliminating the use of television in schools, but I do feel it would be a step in the right direction.

Sincerely,
Michael Jacobbe

Lillian Murray announces selectman candidacy

Lillian M. Murray, a political science student at the University of Massachusetts and a staff member of recent state and national political campaigns, announced her candidacy for selectman.

"I have been raised in a family in which public service is a way of life, and in which serving our community is a personal and family commitment," Murray said.

If elected, she would be the third generation of her family to serve a prominment role in Cohasset town affairs. Murray's mother, State Representative Mary Jeannette Murray is a former selectman and member of the Housing Authority. Lillian's late grandfather, Nathaniel (Nate) Hurwitz was also a Cohasset selectman and state representative.

A native and life-long resident of Cohasset, Lillian is the daughter of Phil and Mary Jeanette Murray and has two brothers, Philip, Jr. and Nathaniel.

Lillian graduated from Cohasset High School in 1975. She attended Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy and received an Associates Degree from Aquinas Junior College in Milton. She is presently enrolled at the U-Mass Harbor Campus where she is pursuing a degree in Political Science and Public Policy.

Murray's civic and school activism began at Cohasset High where she was a member of the Student Advisory Committee to the Cohasset School Committee. She was also a junior member and fund raiser for the Cohasset Community Center.

Her grandfather, Nate Hurwitz, was the founder and first president and director of the Cohasset Community Center.

Lillian Murray

An avid athlete, she played basketball both in high school and college, and field hockey and softball at Cohasset High School.

Her interest in politics resulted in her involvement in several national and state campaigns in this area, and she was Southeastern Massachusetts Coordinator for Ray Shamie in his 1984 run for the United States Senate.

"I hope to bring to this campaign-and to Cohasset town government—the best possible mixture of youthful energy and enthusiasm, combined with the good common sense and community concern of a family deeply committed to this wonderful town," Murray said.

SS VoTech senior says too much TV

A senior at South Shore Vo-Tech met with the school committee last week to express his concern about the use of television in the classrooms.

Michael Jacobbe, from Abington, sent a letter to the committee and to area newspapers saying, "The illiteracy problem begins in the schools, new forms of education that focus on audio-visual equipment instead of reading."

Jacobbe met with Superintendent Clifford Easton to discuss the problem, and asked to be put on the school committee agenda.

"I'm not against the use of television in the schools," Jacobbe told the committee, "but the VCRs shouldn't replace reading.

"The misuse of VCRs is what concerns me," he said. "I don't want to eliminate VCRs, but limit their use.

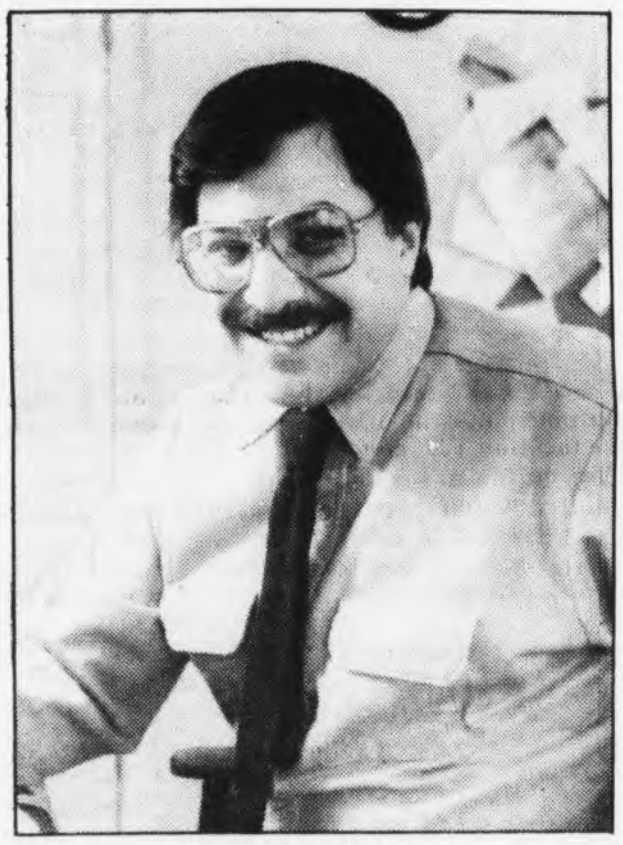
"Some classes, not many, were based on VCRs instead of reading," he said. "That's what concerns me."

In his letter, Jacobbe said a play that might have been read years ago is now watched on videotape.

"The problem with this form of education, T.V. education, is it not only eliminates the need for reading, but also the need for thinking," he wrote. "because the story or subject is already thought out by the director, the actors, the playwrights, or the newscast. The ability to develop a point of view is lost because the student will see it the way it has already been interpreted."

Committee members commended Jacobbe for bringing his concerns to the administration, and asked Easton to investigate the use of television in the classrooms.

"There will be more questioning, and there will be more discussions," Easton said. "In some cases there could be more use of the VCR than there needs to be, but I don't think it's a major problem. One of the problems I have is encouraging staff to use audio-visual materials."



"You really have to look at each individual case," said committee member David Chittim of Cohasset. "You can't pass a blanket rule. Any teaching tool that technology gives us is a wonderful innovation if applied in the right way."

The proposed $3,544,124 budget for the 1987-88 school year at South Shore Vocational Technical High School has been reduced as much as possible, Superintendent Clifford Easton told the regional school committee last week.

"This budget has been through three reviews and it's to the point where it can't be cut any more," said Easton.

The proposed budget is up 7.5 percent from this year's $3,352,124 budget. Easton said decreased federal and state aid contributed to the budget increase.

A public hearing on the budget will be held Wednesday, Jan. 21 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hanover campus, at which the school committee will consider the budget for approval.

Kauffman, Harper join Mariners

Mariner Publisher David S. Cutler this week announced the appointment of Bruce A. Kauffman as executive editor of the Mariner Newspapers. Diane Harper of Marshfield was named as the company's special projects manager.

Kauffman, 40, comes to the Mariner from CNN Headline News in Atlanta, Ga., where he spent the last four years as a writer, copy editor and producer.

He grew up in Norwood and was educated at Phillips Academy and Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio. He earned a masters degree in journalism (with honors) from the University of Missouri and while there was part of the graduate reporting program in Brussels, Belgium.

His journalism career began at the Patriot Ledger as a suburban reporter at the paper's west office. After graduate school, he joined the Hartford Courant as a general assignment reporter. He edited a monthly community newspaper in Hartford called the Westender and then spent nearly seven years with the Hartford Advocate, a 90,000-circulation weekly, as a reporter columnist and city editor.

He edited a book entitled Squeal about organized crime in New England and has been published in a wide variety of magazines, including the Washington Journalism Review, Better Health magazine, Editor and Publisher and Creative Loafing.

After several years in broadcast journalism, Kauffman decided that "print" is his preferred medium and that he wanted to return to the New England coast, Atlanta being too far a march to the sea. At the Mariner he will preside over 13 weekly newspapers and will edit an expanded second section that will focus on regional issues of the South Shore.

He plans to live in Marshfield.

Diane Harper comes to the Mariner from the Cape Cod Division of the Memorial Press Group where she held the positions of publisher and interim advertising director.

Before joining MPG, she was general manager of the Hughes Newspapers on Cape Cod where she supervised the publication of five weekly newspapers.

Educated at Worcester State College and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, she began her journalism career as a part-time office assistant at the Worcester County Newspapers, eventually rising to the position of director of publications for 12 weekly newspapers, one daily and two tourist guides.

She has been active in local government and civic affairs and is a former member of the Youth Drug and Alcohol Abuse Committee established by Gov. Michael Dukakis.

At the Mariner, she will oversee a variety of projects including, promotion, circulation and special sections.

ZBA wants landscaping for Autohaus addition

If the zoning board of appeals has its way, the grass will be greener on Route 3A.

The board indicated Thursday, it will grant a special permit, which will allow Autohaus to expand next door, to the former Bergson's restaurant. The approval, however, is contingent on a landscaping plan.

Autohaus submitted such a plan, but the board found it inadequate. The plan in question called for minimal green space, notably two bushes, one at either side of the front entrance.

The dealership's action left the board with two alternatives. It could deny the special permit for Autohaus' expansion and await an appeal; or it could approve the expansion and impose restrictions.

"There's a question of safety," said board member Terence Farrell. "Do we want a Route 1 type of situation here? I don't think it's appropriate."

Farrell noted, Autohaus will be selling Nissans, in addition to the Ferraris and BMWs it now deals.

He said he fears more traffic congestion in the area, since Nissan sales are more prolific than Autohaus' other models.

Autohaus is also interested in expanding to a location across the highway from its present location.

Farrell said it would be okay if the dealership wants to utilize just the lot across the street, "but if their intention is to use these two parcels as well as the property across the street, that concerns me."

The board agreed, "wall-to-wall" cars would not fit in with plans to "upgrade" the commercial district on Route 3A.

Allowing "a sea of cars" at the old Bergson's site, said board member Barbara Power, would create a couple of safety hazards.

She noted, automobile ingress and egress, as well as pedestrian activity on the lot would be hampered because of the congestion.

Power also questioned the impact such a situation would have regarding the access of emergency vehicles, the access of car carriers and the effect on adjoining properties.

She suggested, approving the special permit with "a credible amount of restrictions" with regard to buffering and the number of cars allowed on the lot.

"However, to do a credible job," she added, "will cost them big bucks."

Chairman Myrna Putziger commented, "The automobile industry is a big-bucks business; that doesn't bother me.

"But no matter how well we craft our regulations," she argued, "we can't enforce them and they won't comply."

Putziger noted a previous problem the board encountered with Autohaus regarding a trailer.

"I think if we grant this permit, even with conditions on green space and on the number of cars, they will abuse it," she said.

Farrell argued, the board could set a three-year renewal on the special permit, which would help ensure the work would be done.

Board member Mark DiGiacomo recommended denying Autohaus a special permit, if only to stall for time.

"The owner of the Bergson's property won't wait for the zoning board's approval," he said. "He will remarket the property."

In an informal poll, her colleagues were split, and it was left to Putziger to determine the board's probable course of action.

"We can go one of two ways," she said. "We can deny the special permit or we can approve it with restrictions which would make it impossible for them to park a sea of cars there."

If we deny it, Putziger said, Autohaus would appeal and the judge would look at the previous use at that site; it was a restaurant, with cars going in and out of there all the time.

"They probably would not appeal if we approved the special permit, even with restrictions," she said. "We can make them do some major landscaping, which will stay there even after they leave. Let's make it real pretty."

Barbara Power will consult with a landscape architect, in working on the board's official decision, which is due April 8.

Cohasset Jack Conway office sets sales mark

The Cohasset office of the Jack Conway Company continued to set the pace for the firm's 37 real estate offices throughout Southeastern Massachusetts with record-breaking annual sales of $33 million in 1986.

The Cohasset office, under the management of Muriel Desmond, a 27-year veteran with the firm, has led the company in sales for 10 consecutive years.

Desmond attributes these outstanding achievements to a team effort by a solid core of hard working, experienced sales associates who know their market and have earned the loyalty of their clients.

Desmond says client loyalty also has played a big role in the growth and success of the Cohasset office.

Although the bulk of their business is done in the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate, Marshfield, Norwell, Hanover and Duxbury, Desmond says she and her sales associates are not necessarily limited to these areas.

Desmond points out that a dozen sales associates in her office contributed mightily to last year's all time high in sales with annual sales of more than $1 million a piece.

In addition, Mary Ellen Neagle, who has been with the Cohasset office for 17 years, contributed more than $9 million to the office total with an individual sales effort that made her number one among the more than 600 real estate sales people now associated with the Conway Company.

Joining her again this year in the multi million dollar sales category in the Cohasset office were Mary Pecce, Gloria Ellis, Larry Figura, Paula Graham, Marge Gorman and Desmond.

Also being honored at a company party Jan. 13 for their contributions to the success of the Cohasset office and individual sales of more than $1 million in 1986 were Connie Clifford, Eunice Coady, Anne Gilligan, Chris Holland, Dick Murphy, Marie Palm, Susan Ryan, Janet Walden, Nelly Willshire and Bobbi Chaplinski.

The Cohasset office served as the flagship of the company's rapidly growing operations until 1970 when Conway moved his headquarters to the modern, three story office building he built at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139 in Hanover.

Desmond says the phenomenal success the office has enjoyed is the cumulative result of many years of work by a dedicated group of people. Successful sales and listings breed more sales and listing referrals and more success, she says.

Sales associates from the Cohasset office of Jack Conway and Co. were recently honored. The Cohasset office broke the company's sales record by topping $33 million last year.

CHS girls hoopsters lose a heartbreaker by one

By Lisa Shumaker
Special to the Mariner

Tuesday, the girls suffered their first loss of the season when they were defeated by a talented Hanover team, 38-37. In this low scoring game, coach Bill Fallon felt his team played very well defensively and put forth a lot of effort; however, Cohasset had a tough time shooting and came up short in the end.

Maureen O'Leary had a great game for Cohasset and led the team on offensive with 18 points. Fallon also cited Melissa Shea as playing well in this game, and he was especially impressed with Melissa's defensive efforts.

The Skippers bounced back from this disappointing loss and crushed Hull on Friday 49-26. Cohasset overwhelmed Hull with its scrambling defense and aggressive rebounding and never let Hull into the game.

Cindy Spooner led all scorers with 20 points. Melissa Shea had a fantastic game and pulled down 12 rebounds. Liz O'Leary and Margie Murphy also played well for the Skippers.

Tuesday, the girls travel to Abington where they hope to add another victory to their already impressive 9-1 record. Friday, Cohasset faces a tough Whitman/Hanson team.

WRESTLING

Wednesday, the boys decisively beat Cape Cod Tech 48-18. Coach Torin Sweeney felt Cohasset's domination of the entire match showed the overwhelming improvement of the team.

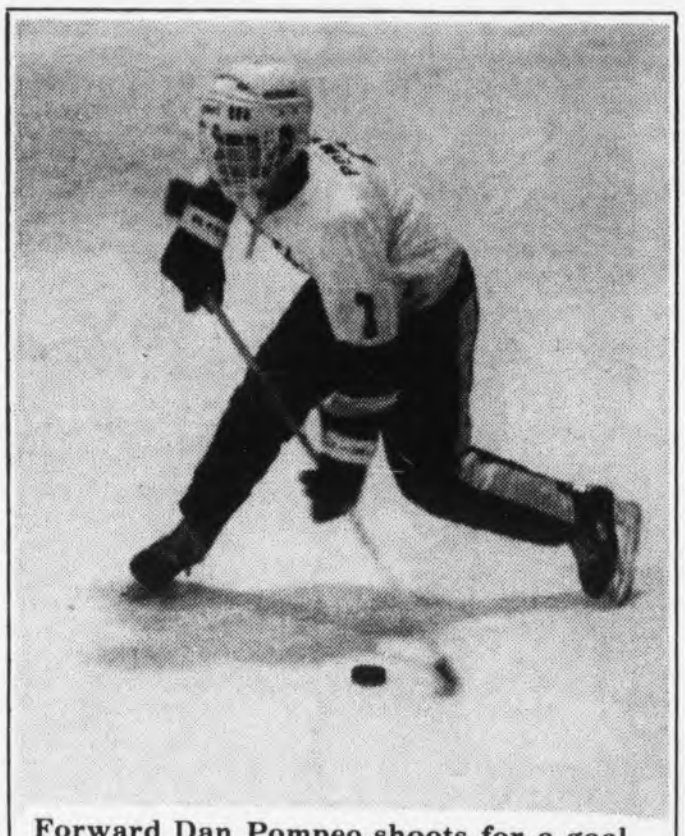
For last season the two teams were evenly matched. Sweeney thought everybody on his team wrestled well and attributed the victory to Cohasset's thorough preparation for the match.

John Rhodes, Tim Perotti, Doug Bennet, Peter Buckley, Glen Froio, Liam Stanford and Patrick O'Conner all pinned their opponents for victories.

Saturday, the boys lost a tough close match to a division one school Hingham 36-24. Sweeney was disappointed by the loss but felt his team showed a lot of heart in this match.

Both Liam Stanford and Doug Bennet won their matches and improved their records to 8-0. Glen Froio, Pat O'Conner, and Paul Froio also turned in victories for Cohasset. Sweeney was especially impressed with Paul's performance for he has been forced to wrestle in a larger weight class than he should.

Last week the Skippers were ranked fifth in a state coaches' poll out of 16 teams in Cohasset's division. With a respectable 5-3 record, Sweeney feels confident as Cohasset faces Duxbury, a team which the Skippers have never beaten on Wednesday. Saturday, the boys wrestle against a weak Silver Lake team.



HOCKEY

Wednesday, the boys were defeated by Sandwich 7-2. Coach Dennis Walsh attributed the loss to injuries, fatigue, mental lapses, and plain bad luck.

Danny Pompeo and Jeff Hartwell played well on the front line for Cohasset. Craig Mulcahy also turned in a good effort.

Saturday, the boys suffered another loss, this time at the hands of league leader Abington 2-1. Cohasset beat Abington in its first game of the season, but Walsh felt his team played much better this time around. Cohasset had several scoring opportunities especially toward the end of the game but came up short.

Monday, Bishop Fenwick defeated the Skippers 4-3. This game was evenly played throughout, but unfortunately in the last two minutes Bishop Fenwick popped in the winning goal.

Danny Pompeo and Jeff Hartwell had good games for Cohasset along with goalie Pete Sandblom who has been consistently playing well throughout the entire season.

After a four day rest, the boys face off against Rockland on Saturday. Walsh feels Cohasset needs a win on Saturday in order to build up the team's confidence. Monday, Cohasset takes on a weak Whitman/Hanson team.

GYMNASTICS

Under the direction of coach Ruth Ann Sargent, the gymnastics team consisting of many young girls now stands at 1-3. In the first meet of the season the Skippers lost to Norwell 97.9-84.65. Michelle Hartley placed first all around in this meet but her efforts were not enough to give Cohasset a victory.

The girls bounced back from this loss to beat Rockland 85-64.2. Michelle Hartley finished first overall followed by Melissa Rousseau who placed second overall.

Cohasset swept the uneven bars with Michelle Hartley coming in first, Carrie Ripley in second, and Melissa Rousseau picking up a third. Michelle Hartley then picked up three second place finishes in the balance beam, vault and floor exercises. Mary Beth McNamara picked up a third in the vault and Melissa Rousseau placed third in the floor exercises.

The girls were then defeated by Hanover and Duxbury, but Sargent felt the girls showed a lot of enthusiasm and spirit in these meets.

Against Duxbury, Michelle Hartley placed first overall and Sargent believes that this freshman has a very good shot at making the state tournament.

Sargent feels her team's only weakness is its inexperience but hopefully its enthusiasm will make up for any inexperience Cohasset might have. Sargent has been pleased with the leadership co-captains Marlisa Clapp and Michelle Hartley have been showing and has been grateful to Manager Patty Tolini for all her efforts. Sargent also cited Liz Buckley, Hilary Prudian, Cory DeSantis and Brooke Anderson as hard workers on the team.

Wednesday, the girls travel to Scituate where they hope to reach their goal of breaking 90 points.

BOYS' BASKETBALL

Tuesday, the boys beat Hanover in a low scoring game 59-45. Hanover tried to take Cohasset out of its fast paced style of playing by slowing the game down. However, the Skippers beat Hanover at its own game by showing some patience and ended up winning by a comfortable margin.

Bryan Edwards had a great game and had 22 points. Matt Maloney with 14 points and Tom Larson with 10 points both did a good job rebounding. David Shultz turned in a terrific effort defensively and picked up a couple of steals.

Friday, the Skippers were once again victorious as they beat Hull 67-58. Cohasset maintained an 8 or 9 point lead throughout the entire game and was in control at all times.

Bryan Edwards led all scorers with 20 points. Michael Smith had an outstanding game with 13 points, 10 rebounds and 6 blocked shots. Mat Maloney who contributed 16 points and 11 rebounds also turned in a tremendous effort. Tom Larson and David Shultz each had good games defensively.

At the end of the first half of the season Cohasset stands at 7-1 in the league, 8-2 overall, and in first place in the small schools division. The team is suffering from many injuries at this point and will have to work even harder to maintain the success it has been enjoying thus far. Tuesday, the boys are home against Abington, and Friday they face Whitman/Hanson.

Both teams are talented and should be a challenge for the Skippers. However, the biggest challenge of the regular season for Cohasset occurs next Tuesday when the team faces the dreaded Duxbury Dragons. This game will match the best team from the large school division with the number one team from the small school division and should prove to be a very exciting game for both players and fans.

CHS chorus to perform at Disney World

The CHS Chorus has been chosen to perform at Disney World by Magic Music Days — the entertainment division of Walt Disney World.

Many apply, but few are chosen, Choral Director Bryan Marks said last week. "The application process was extensive. We sent videos, a resume of our accomplishments at music festivals, copies of programs, letters, newspaper articles." Marks says he considers the Chorus' selection an honor. . .but a well-deserved one.

April 5 the Chorus will perform at Lake Buena Vista Dockside, which is the major shopping center for Disney World. Marks said the performance at Disney World will be a short one, consisting of popular music, pop and show tunes familiar to general listeners. On April 4 the Chorus will be performing at Sea World.

Thirty-four chorus members in grades 9-12 plan to participate. "Cost per student is just $409.00 each," Marks said. "We're hoping to defray the cost through various fundraising efforts. Our next fundraising event will be The Valentine Cabaret which will be held at Kimball's By-The-Sea. (Details to follow in next week's Mariner).

This is the Senior Chorus' first major field trip. Marks said he felt "The time is right. For the past two years we've had quality choruses. . .which has been borne out at festival competitions. The caliber of the music we do is excellent. . .and I'm proud to be able to present these students to an international audience."

Members of the CHS chorus will be on their way to a well-deserved work/ vacation to Disney World in April.

deeper water for the second shedding of their shells. It is then they are most vulnerable to the draggers, because they crush easily.

"We want the state to keep them from dragging these areas," Jason said.

On an average day, Jason said he gets up between four and 6 a.m., looking forward to 8 to 10 hours work, and goes down to load bait aboard his boat. He uses mostly frozen pogees, herring and redfish.

"I used to go into Boston and truck it out in drums," he said. As the bait in Boston got more expensive, Jason started buying his bait from the pogee boats in Hingham and Hull. "In the summer, we buy them frozen and they're thawed for the next day."

He fishes a total of 700 traps, pulling half each day. Year round, he hauls some 35 ten-pot trawls aboard his 35-foot boat.

Jason once found a mannequin leg in one of his traps.

"I've found fish, debris, boots and beer cans by the dozens in my traps," he added. "It's sort of a lobsterman's joke to pull up a pot and put crazy stuff in.

In the spring, most lobsters and most fishermen move closer to the shore. Not Jason. "Spring is when we get a lot of northeast storms," he said. "In a spring nor'easter, you could get wiped out; it could smash the pots to pieces.

"It's the northeast storm fishermen fear the most," he said. "In shore, you could catch a lot of lobsters, but what if a northeast storm comes up?"

Jason noted, many lobsters this year are keeping to the hard bottom, rather than the mud.

"If it's shallow, and you're on rock, he added, and a northeaster comes up, you can kiss your gear goodbye."

Jason has kissed his gear goodbye a couple of times.

The first time Jason sank, he lost everything, including his 20-foot boat. He was out in a nor'easter in 1945, when a big wave came along and rolled his boat over. "I shouldn't have been out there," he said. "I had to swim a half-mile to Brush Island, and I had a kid with me; I had to save him too."

The next time, it was January, back in the 1960s. He recalled. "I sank, but was able to save the boat. I hit a pipe in the side of the channel, which the dredging company had put in. I was out by Minot's Light, when the boat started acting funny. When I looked, the water was up around the engine.

"So I headed for the nearest land," he said. "Heavy seas were breaking over the ledges, and I wanted to get my boat to the lee side, so the boat wouldn't break into pieces."

Jason was in the water for a half-hour before another fisherman, Johnny Figueiredo picked him up.

As the season goes on through July and August, the lobsters and boats move steadily out to deeper water.

When this happens, the competition gets tough.

"When I was a kid, in the old days, I only fished about 100 pots," he recalled. After World War 2, things got easier; advances such as nylon became available for netting.

With the increasing competition and fewer fish, a lesser man might have thrown in the towel. Jason is after all 73 years old, but he's hardy and fishing is in his blood.

"My family has always been fishermen," he said. "My grandfather came over to New Bedford from the Azores and worked on the mackerel schooners. As a boy, I remember school letting out early during the mackerel runs, so we could go and work on the fleet."

He pointed to the weathervane atop the Pratt Memorial Library, as a symbol of Cohasset's heritage. It is a mackerel.

Jason began as a commercial fishermen, with a dory and two oars during the depresssion. "I had to row 10 miles per day," he said.

As a student at Weymouth Vocational Technical High School, Jason studied engine repair, which helped him maintain his crafts, as well as earn extra money during those tough early years.

Jason was the first in Cohasset Harbor to own a diesel engine. "That was the best thing that ever happened," he said. "When the 1970s oil crunch was on, diesel fuel was available."

While Jason was a diesel trendsetter in the 1970s, he kept his eye on Cohasset tradition.

"What's a fisherman going to do if he has no place to put his mooring?" he queried. "There is no simple solution to the mooring problems in the harbor.

Of the recent marina proposal, Jason said, "It's a case, I feel, of discrimination against the fishermen by the pleasure-boaters at the yacht club."

As a member of the harbor study committee, Jason represented the fishermen's opposition to the marina proposal at hearings before the selectmen.

He argued, Cohasset's $2,791,000 fishing fleet will brought in nearly $2 million worth of lobsters in 1986.

Among his other points, Jason argued, lobster fishing is the biggest business in town," he said. "We employ local help, we buy our fuel here, we live in Cohasset and spend our money here. Two million dollars is quite a boost to the economy.

"The fishing industry is alive and well and growing every year," he added.

The marina proposal was torpedoed at the hearing, as selectmen refused to allow the committee to proceed to the board of appeals.

"I don't think the people of Cohasset want this to happen to the fishermen," Jason noted.

Jason is proud he has been able to help maintain the heritage of the Cohasset fishermen. It fits in with a habit he has formed.

"On the way in, I always look back to see if anyone has a distress beacon up.

"If I ever get in trouble out there, I'd rather a fisherman come to my aid," he said. "There's always a fisherman out there willing to help."

His opponents on the town hall floor might consider Herbert Jason all wet. And in a way, they are right.

When Jason isn't floating atop the water, pulling up lobsters. He is often in the water, because his favorite hobby is scuba diving.

"I try to get out at least once a week," he said. "I look for wrecks and lost lobster pots."

Perhaps Jason's most significant find was the anchor to a British Man O' War, which he donated to the Cohasset Historical Society.

Jason figures he's only 73, and is in good health, "so I'll keep at it."

He explained, "I just love the ocean."

on the state title. We wanted to win the Christmas tourney, which we did. And then we'd like to get the league title. Then after that, it's one game at a time."

The team captains agreed with their coach's assessment.

Co-captain Maria Cahill said, "I think the success of our team is because of the amount of talent we have. And everyone gets along really well. This year especially, everyone is friends. We have a lot of fun."

The senior point guard admitted, "I hope we win it all. I think we can.

"I'd love to win it all. It's something we deserve - something we've worked for since early in December."

The team often practices six days a week, sometimes for two hours a day.

"We have the talent," Cahill noted. "And I know if we make to the state tournament, there'll be a lot of intensity. Everyone will be mentally prepared for it."

Her co-captain, Maureen O'Leary, concurred. "The potential is there to go right to the top. We're ready for it. Last year we relied on a few good scorers to get us through. This year, everyone scores. There's no top three players; we all contribute. We have no one among the top three scorers in the league, yet we have the best record. Our defense is one of the toughest in the league.

"I thought we'd be better this year," she stated. "Last year was more of a learning thing with us. We had just graduated a number of the players the year before, and we were just learning to play together. We lacked experience. This year, everyone works together really well. No one is out for herself. We're having a blast, and we're all really good friends."

The team captain said that feeling of cooperation extends to her sister and teammate, Liz. "Some of her friends are on the team, so we're all very close," Maureen explained.

Coach Fallon listed the qualities of his starting five players. Eleven members, however, comprise this winning varsity squad. They include Sarah Dickerman, a senior forward; Liz O'Leary, a junior guard, and Debbie Hartley, a sophomore forward. Other team members are: Kristin Ellinger, a sophomore forward; Nancy Riley, a sophomore forward, and Heather St. Onge, a junior guard.

The five team regulars include captain O'Leary, a senior guard. "This is her third year on varsity. She made the league's all star squad last year and is probably the best individual player and one of our top scorers."

Co-captain Cahill, according to the coach, "does a real good job of running the offense for us." Maria is a senior point guard.

Coach Fallon described senior center Melissa Shea as "probably the best inside defensive player and rebounder we have. She's done a really good job for us this year."

Marge Murphy is a junior forward. She is described by her coach as "maybe all-round, the most talented player on this team. She started last year as a sophomore and is now probably our best shooter and potentially the best shooter in the league."

Junior forward Cindy Spooner is now the team's leading scorer, according to her coach. She is averaging 14 points per game.

And if there was any question who would replace this year's wunderkin, one need only ask a confident varsity coach. "Don't forget our junior varsity team," he warned. "They're 7-1 now, and they've only lost five games in the past three years."

That's confidence.

Bill to protect volunteer coaches filed

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of the Third Plymouth District has co-sponsored legislation which would limit the liability of volunteers and organizations involved in youth sports programs.

"This Good Samaritan bill will protect volunteer coaches, parents or anyone else associated with a team against the type of law suits that could discourage civic-minded individuals and organizations from making a wide variety of sports activities available to our children", Rep. Murray explained.

The legislation will protect any volunteer who serves without pay and an association which sponsors teams from civil damages. The immunity would not extend to gross negligence or intentional acts which harm a person.

"In my opinion, when children participate in organized athletics run by volunteer organizations such as Little League, there exists a partnership between the coaches and the parents," Mary Jeanette said.

"It is the responsibility of both to help the child learn and grow.

"Great care is taken to protect the children from accidents, but as we all know, there is always the potential for something to happen. Medical insurance is always available to cover the injury, but allowing liability suits will first eliminate the volunteers and then the sports."

Two sections of Painting and Drawing I for ages six to eight will be taught—one in Cohasset on Thursdays starting January 22 from 4-5:30 p.m. by Lynn Rizzote and the other in Hull on Thursdays by Nancy Connolly. Young artists will learn about design, composition and color using craypas, tempera and watercolors.

For the older child, ages nine to twelve, Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman will teach Painting and Drawing II on Tuesdays in Cohasset beginning January 20 from 4-5:30 p.m. Instruction will include mirror drawing, basics of landscape and use of acrylic paint.

Nancy Connolly will teach several courses for young artists. For ages six to twelve the Center offers Child's Clay in Cohasset on Fridays beginning January 23 from 4-5:30 p.m and for the older child, nine through fourteen, she will teach Sculpture also in Cohasset on Tuesdays beginning January 26 from 4-5:30 p.m. In the sculpture course she will have students model a clay mask, carve a relief in plaster and form an armature from wire.

Connolly will also teach a Child's Art Workshop designed to emphasize individual expression and explore various art concepts at the Hingham Community Center on Wednesdays beginning January 21 from 4-5:30 p.m. This course is open to young artists ages six to eleven.

For moms and their tots, Connolly will teach Moms and Tots, a series of creative projects that can be reproduced at home. She will teach in Cohasset on Mondays starting Jan. 26 from 10-11 a.m. and again in Hingham on Fridays starting January 23 from 10-11 a.m.

Three sections of Mixed Media for ages six to ten are being offered—in Hingham on Mondays starting January 26 from 4-5:30 p.m. taught by Wyman; in Cohasset on Tuesdays starting January 20 from 4-5:30 p.m. by Wyman; and in Scituate on Tuesdays be Serena Brundige. Students will work with clay, cardboard, wood and recycled materials in creating 3-dimensional art work.

High School students may also inquire about enrolling in adult classes. The young artist courses offer students excellent opportunity to develop their artistic abilities. Advanced registration is required for these classes. Call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548, for a complete schedule of courses.

Theatre Review

'Tribute' is old hat but with no new wrinkles

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

The main character in "Tribute," now playing at the Nickerson Theatre in Norwell through Feb. 7, is a man who discovers he is dying of cancer and wants to tie up the loose ends in his life. The theatre and acting become the metaphor for life itself.

Humor is interjected into an essentially humorless subject. One-liners please the audience, but for the most part, Bernard Slade's "Tribute" is old hat.

The play was first produced in 1978 on Broadway after a Boston try-out. Starring Jack Lemmon, who later appeared in the movie version, "Tribute" followed a long list of cancer-related dramas that were popular during the 1970's. It is not as compelling as "Shadow Box," nor as maudlin as "Brian's Song" or "Sunshine."

Scottie Templeton is a 51-year-old Peter Pan who makes his living "pleasing the crowd." He has been a writer of prose and movie scripts, a producer, and a publicity man. Everyone loves Scottie—even his ex-wife.

His conflict is with his son, Jud, a serious student and someone who does not appreciate his father's enjoy-it-while-you-can lifestyle. There's a lot of "emotional baggage" between them. Jud was eight years old when Scottie left; father and son have much to resolve in a short time.

Jared Waye brings significant insight to the role of Jud Templeton. Mr. Waye has appeared in several Nickerson productions, including "The Rainmaker" and "The Fantasticks."

It's especially interesting to see how he has developed his craft as an actor. Stilted lines and predictable reactions are handled with freshness and skill. There's growth in Mr. Waye's character, and that growth is revealed with subtlety.

Dawn Davis, as the prostitute Hilary who realized her dream through Scottie's unconventional help, is another member of the cast who breathes real life into an artificial character. She's the proverbial hooker-with-a-heart-of-gold, but Ms. Davis goes beyond the typical portrayal.

Others in the cast, however, are held back by the artificiality of the play. Gene Lindsey as Scottie, Bill McDonald as Scottie's old friend and employer, Renee Miller as Scottie's physician, Sharon Harwood as Jud's love interest, and Betty Lee Bogue as Scottie's ex-wife, inhabit the stage of "Tribute," but they don't live there.

The structure of the play involves the audience as members of a theatre party brought together to celebrate Scottie Templeton's birthday. The "Tribute" is a gift to Scottie; the friends reaffirm his positive influence on their lives. Through a series of flashbacks, Scottie's past is shared.

While the first act is ambiguous as to whether or not Scottie is still alive; the second act leaves no room for doubt.

"Tribute" was directed by Judy Braha who is remembered for her sensitive protrayal of Laura in the Nickerson Theatre's "The Glass Menagerie" and for her tight directing of "The Rainmaker" last year.

The current production does not exhibit the naturalness often associated with Braha productions. Some gag lines are treated with a heavy hand, others are thrown away. None offer new insight or perspective to a now all too common situation.

The next production at the Nickerson Theatre is Neil Simon's "Barefoot in the Park." The play will run from Feb. 11 to March 21.

New transit funds to benefit South Shore

South Shore senior and disabled residents will benefit from new transportation services as a result of a $77,840 grant awarded to the South Shore Community Action Council.

The grant, made through the state's Mobility Assistance Program, will be used to purchase two wheelchair accessible vans, one wheelchair accessible minibus and seven mobile radios.

State Transportation Secretary Fred Salvucci said the Mobility Assistance Program grants allow local public and private non-profit programs to purchase vehicles and other equipment for their senior and disabled transportation programs.

The vehicles, which seat between eight and sixteen passengers, will primarily be used to provide accessible transportation to nutrition sites and shopping areas for the elderly and handicapped. The new radio equipment will allow the program to provide quicker, more responsive service.

Donald Balboni, Transportation Manager for the South Shore Community Action Council, says the funding will enable the Council to serve more people.

The South Shore Community Action Council provides accessible transportation to residents of Marshfield, Pembroke, Duxbury, Kingston, Plympton, Middleboro, Carver, Plymouth and Wareham.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

What's yours is mine if I want it

The relevance of many Boston political events to the rest of the Commonwealth is tangential: they touch us, they entertain us, they disgust us, but they usually operate in the rarified air of Boston politics and do not profoundly affect non-Bostonians. Not so the 1985 Boston census, an apparent abomination that threatens to cost Southeastern Massachusetts a couple of legislators and millions of dollars in disbursements.

The history is this. Under the Massachusetts Constitution (as amended) the state is required to conduct a census anytime Father Time (as amended by the Christian Calendar) holds a year ending in "5"—to wit 1985. The census is taken in each of Massachusetts' 351 communities by local officials according to shockingly differing criteria; and it determines the population upon which both legislative districts and state disbursements will be apportioned for a full decade.

The figure Boston produced, one that reflected questionable estimates of questionable cohorts such as students, the homeless, illegal aliens, residents of illegial boarding houses, and long-term hospital patients, exceeded the Federal Census Bureau's estimate for 1985 by some 120 thousand. This discrepancy was brought to the attention of Sec. of State Michael Connolly by his legal counsel, a Cantabrigian himself said to be positioning himself for a future campaign. Connolly investigated the matter, and with some fortitude given that the base of his own constituency is the capital city, refused to certify Boston's number.

Long negotiations ensued. Boston reluctantly agreed to redo the census, then realized that reconstructing a 1985 population in 1987 would be a farce in which not even Ray Flynn—said to be a fine actor—could play the leading role. Finally the Legislature passed a bill creating a five-man commission (three Democrats, two Republicians) which will settle the matter before the 1988 election if we are so lucky.

I first got exercised about the matter because as the owner of a two-family dwelling in Boston I received a census mailing dated January 6, 1986 querying me and my household as to the name, race, ethnicity, sex, birthday, occupation, nationality, and (I kid you not) the sex of, respectively, our licensed and unlicensed dogs!

I was so incensed by these racist, intrusive, and altogether stupid questions, and by the altogether unconstitutional threat accompanying them to remove me from the voting list should I fail to provide satisfactory answers, that I stuffed the documents into a thickening file labeled "Ray Flynn—outrages!" So incensed was I, in fact, at the insinuation that the lady of the house might be unlicensed, that I at first didn't notice that the parties Ray Flynn had presumed occupied my dwelling on January 6, 1986 included tenants who had moved out in 1980, 1983, 1985, and 1985 respectively, plus a pregnant 16-year-old runaway with an abusive boyfriend whom I had let stay with me for 2 1/2 weeks in 1983!

What in my incensed state I was temporarily insensate to was the obvious inference that anyone documented as a long-term resident on January 6, 1986 must have been counted in the 1985 census. Obviously, then, unless my house were, as its owner is often said to be, an aberration, there must be tens of thousands of people who were counted in 1985 who should not have been.

Moreover, the January 6, 1986 mailing, which, once I had simmered down, resulted in my informing the city as to the correct (and much reduced) number of tenants in the building, was the first such mailing I can recall. We curiously received no such mailing in 1985, a mailing that would have resulted in the city's having the correct, much reduced figure in time for the official 1985 census.

Moreover, sources in the Boston Election Department, which conducted the 1985 census, tell me that it has long been common for non-voters to be carried on Boston's so called "street listing" for years after their departure or demise. The reason is simple: The Election Department's real job is the voter list, not the census. When a registered voter fails to vote for a couple of elections, the Election Department will seek confirmation of his continued residency and drop his name if he canot be located. But if he never registered to vote, as my long-departed tenants had not, he was often carried on the street listing indefinitely.

To be fair, there is another side to this story. One of Boston's election commissioners explained to me that any large city has a higher percentage of transient residents than does the typical surburban or rural community. This cohort of transients is a legitimate part of a city's population, for its demands for city services are at least as great as those of the stable population. Yet the number of such transients is very hard to pin down without spending millions.

Nevertheless, the obvious inflation of the numbers as revealed in microcosm around my hearth, the failure of the city to try to weed out the long-departed until after the 1985 census had been turned in with a straight face, and the fact that the much more professional Federal Census Bureau supports a much reduced 1985 figure for Boston, lead me to conclude that the rest of the state stands to get screwed if Boston's figure is not substantially reduced. You will, I trust, forgive my borrowing a term from the lexicon of carpentry; no other word will do to describe the political and fianancial consequences for the rest of the state if Ray Flynn's census stands.

That puts a heap of pressure on Gov. Dukakis who will appoint the five members of the commission that will settle the matter. Dukakis' political support is statewide, yet Ray Flynn's heavily Democratic Boston is necessarily the largest single component to the coalition that will try to keep the governor employed in either Boston or Washington in the coming years. The question, then, is this: We know that Gov. Dukakis will gladly come down to the Sons of Italy in Marshfield and like places to gladhand with his suburban friends, and we're glad about that. But will he support his suburban supporters in the crunch if their cause is just when they are pitted against Ray Flynn's Boston? Or, to put it crudely, is Dukakis in the tank with Flynn?

The word from one Statehouse wag is that the governor will use his two Republican appointments to go undetected into the "tank" with Flynn—in other words appoint Republicans likely to succumb to the pressure to vote Boston's way. I hold too high an opinion of this governor to believe that cynical scenario, which I heard from a Democratic legislator.

But for the sake of my opinion, and far more importantly for the sake of the communities that stand to lose legislative seats and millions of dollars in the next decade should an unfair decision come to be rendered, that commission had better be both Solominic in its wisdom and the best five appointments Mike Dukakis has ever made. No artificially balanced "a black, a woman, two Republicans, and a jogger" sort of commission will do. This commission must be absolutely independent; and in the calibre of its personnel it must be capable of choosing, in the words of the prayer of the Academy at West Point, "the harder right over the easier wrong."

As to Mayor Ray Flynn, I will concede that he has been very good for Boston both politically and spiritually, and is a decided improvement on his immediate predecessor. But he has a quality that I find increasingly disturbing, an attitude, socialistic in tone, that is frequently reflected in Flynn's policies and public statements. It is the attitude that "what's yours is mine if I want it."

Flynn reflected this attitude when he bullied a longtime Jamaica Plain businessman, an acquaintance of mine, into selling his store for a new police station that could have gone on any of a hundred open sites in the Southwest Corridor. Flynn reflects this attitude every time he comes to the Legislature for a hand-out. And I believe he reflected this attitude in the way he and his people cooked up the 1985 census figure.

All of that is history. What is for the future to unfold is whether or not the rest of Massachsuetts, and in particular Southeastern Massachusetts, which since the 1975 census has been the fastest growing part of the state, will lose two House seats, part of a Senate seat, and untold millions of dollars to the sort of dissembling census that had tenants who moved out of my house in 1980 and still living there in 1986.

Their name, by the way, was Laredo. They were Peruvian, a family of six. I was sorry to see them go.

MUSINGS — by John H. Cutler

☐ Did you ever stop to think that some folks never stop to think?

☐ Today's quiz: What is the longest river in the world? Answer below.

☐ Irving Babbitt, an eminent professor of English at Harvard, opened one class with these words: "Probably none of you young men has ever seen a gentleman."

☐ Often, a clever thought comes swiftly out of the blue. You need a tool to capture it before it is lost forever, so harpoon the idea with a pen.

☐ Some men grow under responsibility, said Woodrow Wilson. "Others swell." This is especially true of little men who are given more power than they can handle. Remind you of anyone?

Answer to above quiz: The Nile River, which is 4,145 miles long.

☐ When a person "lucks out," is it good or bad news? It can mean both good and bad luck, depending upon who is talking.

☐ Dumb is the cluck who says, "so isn't he," when he means, "so is he."

☐ Craig Nettles, former Yankee infielder: "When I was a kid, I wanted to play baseball and join the circus. When I got to the Yankees, I was able to do both."

☐ After spending 30 years in the game, Yogi Berra defined baseball: "It's 90 percent mental and the other half is physical."

☐ How did the Italians get rid of Mussolini? They deduced him.

☐ The late Sydney Harris speaking: "Nobody can be so amusingly arrogant as a young man who has just discovered an old idea and thinks it is his own." Harris must have been kidding, since he was credited with this remark: "When I hear somebody sigh that 'life is hard,' I am always tempted to ask, 'compared to what?'" Look, Sid, a French philosopher said this in the 18th century.

☐ Do you know anyone who writes the way he speaks?

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Welcome 4685, the Year of the Rabbit'

Legend has it that when Lord Buddha called all the animals together, the first 12 to arrive became the 12 animal signs of the zodiac.

The Chinese calendar moves in cycles of 12 years and Jan. 29 marks the beginning of the year 4685, the Year of The Rabbit.

Although rabbit is featured on many gourmet restaurant menus now, tofu is much more to my liking and a much more enticing way of getting the necessary protein.

Discovered by a Chinese lord in 164, B.C., tofu has been a staple in the Oriental diet and as we become more health conscious, it grows more popular here.

High in protein and calcium, yet low in calories, fat and sodium, tofu is the only major protein source that's cholesterol and lactose free.

So, let's observe the Chinese New Year with a tofu sandwich, made simply by slicing and frying a slice in a bit of vegetable oil and soy sauce. Serve in a sandwich with mustard, mayonnaise, lettuce, onion, sprouts, etc.

. . . Blend 3 oz. tofu with fruit, sweetener, vanilla and some ice to taste. . . . Add crumbled tofu to eggs when scrambling. . . . Use instead of half the cheese, in your favorite cheese dishes and add sauteed tofu to your spaghetti sauce for a low calorie, low cholesterol addition.

Not only is this the Year of the Rabbit, someone from somewhere (the National Garden Bureau to be exact), has decreed that 1987 is also the "Year of the Tomato and Marigold."

Chosen because both are native to the Americas, easy to grow, providing ample beauty and bounty whether nurtured by an experienced or beginner gardener, it seems the seed of both is popular with us all.

Tomatoes were once thought to be poisonous, but when they were first introduced from England they became known as Love Apples and today are our most popular vegetable. Judith Ridgway suggests serving them in this unusual dish she calls

Baked Cheddar Tomatoes

Peel and thinly slice 1 1/2 pounds tomatoes. Divide slices among six buttered 4" gratin dishes and add 1 tsp. dry sherry to each dish. Sprinkle tomatoes with salt and pepper and bake in a preheated 300 degree oven for 30 min. Add to each dish 2T heavy cream and 3T grated Cheddar cheese. Bake tomatoes for 15 min. more and garnish with minced parsley.

Looking at the calendar for 1987, it would seem that life is fast becoming just one big celebration. Every month has a special day or week set aside such as Lei Day, Law Day, Volunteers Day and soon-to-be, Groundhog Day. Not going over too well since introduced several years ago, is Grandparents Day. Could it be because grandparents are supposed to "swing" these days - grandma turns blonde instead of gray and grandpa sports a gold chain with his dungarees? In an old scrapbook of clippings from the turn of the century, memories that lingered down through the years were more like this of Sunday dinner

At Grandma's

"Dinner bell a-ringing. . Muffins piping hot. . . Chicken, too and dumplings. . . Steaming in the pot. . . Cherry pie a'plenty. . . Ginger cake so good. . . Oh, if we could only eat. . . Bushels more of food." Cookie jars were always filled with treats such as

Raisin Mumbles

3/4 c. butter or oleo
1 c. brown sugar
1 3/4 c. flour
1/2 tsp. ea. salt and soda
1 1/2 c. Quick Oats

Mix butter and sugar. Add flour, salt & soda. Mix well. Then add oats. Press half mixture into a 9x13" cake pan.

FILLING:
2 1/2 c. seedless raisins
1/2 c. sugar
2T cornstarch
3/4 c. water
3T lemon juice

Cook above ingredients until mixture starts to thicken. Cool slightly and spread on top of crumb mixture. Press remaining crumb mix on top of filling. Bake at 400 degrees for 20 minutes. Cut in squares.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Till Skip comes marching home again

"I can't believe Skip's gone," I told the Dragon.

"I can," he responded. "His friends — mostly female — call at least a dozen times a day to see if I have his address yet.

"The carton of cigarettes I had in the bottom drawer of my desk isn't there any more.

"I've had to feed the dogs and take the trash to the dump by myself all week.

"And," he concluded with a flourish, "he took all my socks with him."

I nodded. "You shouldn't smoke anyway. Either of you. And my best towels are gone, too. I seem to recall that when Jay went into the service he wasn't supposed to bring anything. They told him they'd supply all his needs.

"Skip, on the other hand, went to the Army taking my tote bag, your shaving kit, Breida's radio, Maureen's camera, Larry's running shoes, Pat's books, a box of stationery and the family's VCR."

The Dragon shrugged. "Maybe it's military strategy. Maybe the new Army anesthetizes the enemy by making him watch old 'Three's Company' and 'Shop by Television' reruns. In a real national emergency they might try to neutralize the foe with 76 hours of 'Mr. Rogers.'"

"Could be," I admitted. "But that doesn't explain why I feel so weird. For the last nineteen years I've been saying I couldn't wait till our youngest child grew up. I was going to convert his room to an ashram and take up transcendental meditation. I was going to learn to paint landscapes — play the violin — write a novel.

"I was going to throw a party that would be remembered through the ages. And we were going to travel all over the world."

"We still can," the Dragon pointed out. "And I can take up jogging, and I can stop smoking because I won't have so many things making me nervous. And I'll have more time for hobbies. Like working in the garage, fixing televisions and inventing things. We're approaching the best years of our lives."

"I'm not sure." I told him. "When the kids were little, my mother always said we should enjoy those years because they were the best of our lives. I never believed her. I said that if there was nothing ahead better than having all your kids sick with upset stomaches and lower intestinal disturbances at one time, then the future was pretty bleak. Now I wonder. If the best years of our lives are still ahead of us, how come we both feel like crying?"

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave," the Dragon sighed, "when first we practice to conceive. But look at the bright side."

"What bright side?" I asked hopefully.

He sighed again. "I was hoping you'd know.

"Why don't we do some of that meditation you're always talking about and see if we can come up with one?"

"Okay," I agreed. "But it has to be something better than being able to use the telephone or the bathroom whenever we want to. For one thing, we still have a few kids who feel the Constitution gives them inalienable rights to both. For another, the only reason I'm glad we have a phone right now is because I keep hoping he'll call."

We thought in silence for a few minutes — both remembering a baby that was born two months early. He was a deep blue in color, and we couldn't get the doctor to promise he'd live. We remembered the first uncertain weeks of his life. His dogged determination to grow and improve. His insatiable appetite for life. We saw a cub scout, then a boy scout. A baseball and soccer player. A high school student, triumphant in a muddy football uniform. A wrestler. And now a soldier. We thought about his sensitivity. His ability to make people laugh or cry.

"Please," we prayed. "Keep him safe."

After a while I dried my eyes and inserted a piece of paper in the typewriter.

"I think I'll write a novel," I told the Dragon. "I've already thought of the bright side.

"For the next twelve and a half weeks, for the first time in years, we can be absolutely certain where he is every night. And I know he won't miss home too much. He took most of it with him."

Audubon Society offers seal program

Wildlife observers on New England's coastal waters are fortunate that seals may be easily viewed basking and resting on numerous near-shore rocky and seaweed-covered ledges and small islands.

Unlike whales which are often glimpsed only momentarily while surfacing to breathe, seals regularly rest in full view.

Seals are rather shy creatures, but with a cautious approach to the "haul-out" ledge one can usually observe seal from several hundred feet with binoculars, and often closer with the naked eye.

Sometimes a seal's curiosity may override its shyness, they have been known to follow behind boats and seem to be looking right at you as they bob up and down in the water.

If you would like to learn more about the visiting "feather-footed" sea mammals, come to a slide show and lecture presented by Bob Prescott, director of the Wellfleet Santuary, Jan. 22, at 7:30 p.m. and sign up for a seal cruise by car.

The program will be held at the South Shore Santuary headquarters, 2000 Main St. Marshfield.

On Jan. 23, at 7:30 p.m. the South Shore Bird Club will hold its annual meeting. All are welcome! It will be a night of brief business, slides and popcorn!

On Jan. 30, at 8:15 a.m. is the Friday morning bird talk. It's primetime for ducks, sea birds and snowy owls.

At 7:30 p.m. Jan. 30, is a winter night skies program. Dress warmly and bring binoculars. There will be a telescope. Call 837-9400 to pre-register.

Boston Edison hires Navy nuclear expert

Boston Edison Company has named a retired U.S. Navy officer to head the electric utility's nuclear organization.

Rear Admiral Ralph G. Bird, U.S. Navy (Retired), a 28-year veteran of the nuclear navy and most recently, a consultant to the nuclear power industry, has been appointed Senior Vice President-Nuclear and will report directly to Stephen J. Sweeney, Boston Edison's chairman, president and chief executive officer. A Lee Oxsen, vice president of nuclear operations, and J. Edward Howard, vice president of nuclear engineering and quality assurance, will report directly to Bird.

Since his retirement from the Navy in 1984, Bird has served as a consultant to several nuclear power utilities and worked for Westinghouse Electric Corporation.

Boston Edison Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer James M. Lydon, who has overseen the nuclear organization since July 1, 1986, said, "Ralph Bird brings to us leadership qualities and nuclear experience that is consistent with our stated goals of excellence. It is important to note," Lydon added "that there will continue to be no layers of management between the nuclear organization and the board of directors. This demonstrates the on-going executive involvement at the highest levels of the company."

During his naval career, Bird served 20 years in the naval nuclear power program including extensive service in nuclear submarines. He has also held the positions of Senior Member of the U.S. Pacific Fleet Nuclear Propulsion Examining Board; Chief of Staff, U.S. Pacific Submarine Force and Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics and Security Assistance for the U.S. Pacific Command.

Bird is a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy and holds a Masters Degree in Computer Systems Management from the Naval Post Graduate School in Monterey, California.

Vol. IX, No. 18 | 383-6731/545-7060 | Thursday, January 29, 1987 | 3 Sections | 35 cents

Half-way mark reached on Center's building plans

Expansion of the Cohasset Community Center is set to start this summer.

Through a continuous outpouring of contributions, more than $150,000 has been received and pledged to the project. With half of the funding in hand, project coordinators are now set to award a construction bid.

December was the most successful fundraising month of the past year, according to coordinator Robert Jordan. More than $71,000 was raised through a combination of pledges, donations and memberships.

And, Jordan explained, there was another unusual reason for the high volume of contributions. During the past month, several thousand dollars was raised through memorial donations.

Many persons contributed to the community center building fund in memory of Samuel Wakeman, Bernard Mulcahy and Brewster Pattyson. "These are very meaningful donations," Jordan acknowledged. "Because obviously the community center meant a lot to these people." Mrs. Wakeman's family donated the McElwain Hall, currently used as the nursery school and gymnastic area at the center.

By raising half the projected costs, Jordan said the center will now be able to obtain a low-interest loan for the remaining construction costs. Cohasset Savings, South Shore and the Rockland Trust banks have indicated a willingness to loan the center the remaining half at a low percentage rate. Many local institutions, including the South Shore Playhouse Associates and the Cohasset Savings Bank, have previously indicated long-term financial support for the expansion plans.

The remaining portion of the building costs, Jordan said, will be attained through a continuous supply of business and citizen contributions. "In large part, our plan is that when construction begins, public awareness of what we are doing will increase and the contributions will increase and continue. Financially, this is a huge undertaking. But we feel it will have a dramatic impact not only on our citizens, but on the entire downtown area," Jordan explained, noting that the center's plans will coordinate with current project to expand the neighboring South Shore Art Center.

The goal of this ambitious fundraising effort is "not to raise more than $1,000 a year from most

Fire chief tries again with home sprinkler system

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The fire chief will attempt once more to put Cohasset in the forefront of fire prevention.

Chief Daniel Brock is again proposing that Cohasset approve a bylaw requiring the installation of sprinkler systems in all new residential construction. Town meeting approved the proposal last April, the first community in the Commonwealth to do so. But the bylaw was shot down by the state attorney general.

According to the chief, the attorney general's office argued that there is a method within the state building code which allows selectmen to apply for a provision mandating the sprinkler system. But Chief Brock insisted the local bylaw method is the best.

"I feel that with any regulation abided by the state building commission, in a year that law could be gone. I'm looking for a town bylaw where only the town could decide whether to keep it. I want the local option, not a law ruled by a state commission that could change with the wind," he stated.

Currently, Chief Brock explained, there is proposed state legislation which would grant that local option. A community need only approve the legislation at town meeting, which would allow a municipality the option of requiring the sprinkler system. By submitting an article for the April town meeting, the chief explained, Cohasset would be prepared to accept the wording of the legislation, should it be approved at the state level.

"The area we're getting into," he explained, "is in conflict with the builders of this state. They don't like to be told how to build houses. But 65 percent of those killed in fires are people in their own homes. Records show that the most dangerous building to be in is the home. Builders do what people want them to do, and most are unaware of what is available as far as fire safety is concerned. It's up to the fire service to propose safety items that will reduce death and injuries."

In addition to the residential sprinkler systems, Chief Brock would like to include another warrant

Animal control officer resigns

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Richard Yokum resigned his position Monday night.

Until a replacement is found, only emergency calls will be answered through a mutual aid system by neighboring towns.

Selectmen met with Officer Yokum in executive session Monday night to discuss a personnel matter with him. During the discussion that followed, selectmen asked the part-time animal control officer to submit his resignation. According to Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, at no time did selectmen say they would fire Officer Yokum if he did not submit the resignation.

During the heated discussion between Yokum and selectmen, the officer reportedly threw a chair to the floor and kicked a closed door when he exited the town hall auditorium.

Officer Yokum, who serves part-time for an annual salary of $3,000, stormed out of the room and said he would resign immediately. The officer said he would not answer another animal control call from the town. The telephone number has been disconnected.

Officer Yokum, who is also a member of the Cohasset Police Department, will remain a patrolman. His duties as the town's dog officer were separate from his employment as a police officer.

Although selectmen do not expect to receive a formal letter of resignation, they have voted to accept his verbal resignation, Andrew said.

Selectmen will advertise for the part-time position, and will look to hire someone on an interim basis. In the meantime, emergency calls will be handled on a mutual aid basis by neighboring towns.

Plans to bury Common utilities ditched for duck pond

A proposal to bury the utility wires around Cohasset Common was ditched in favor of repairs to the Common duck pond.

Selectmen heard Monday night from Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle regarding a $34,495 proposal to repair the bottom and walls of the scenic duck pond. They agreed that most of the remaining $21,000 which Warner Brothers donated to the town could be used for the project.

The additional money, about $17,000, would have to be approved and appropriated from town meeting in April.

But some people, including Betsy Stevenson of North Main Street, think that project will be "whittling away the town's money."

Stevenson is a 14-year resident of the Common. During that time, she has watched the trees which encircle the green become entwined and gnarled by overhead utility wires.

"It hurts to see the things God has created cut up by wires and made to be ugly," she stated. "The trees and the Common are beautiful, and unless these wires are cut away, we are going to end up with something that is horrible-looking."

Monday night, selectmen agreed that the duck pond project is something within the town's financial grasp. Burying the utility wires around the Common will cost about $120,000, according to estimates made about two years ago.

Executive Secretary Don Andrew said selectmen received about eight proposals from residents and organizations, suggesting ways in which the Warner Brothers donation could be used. The Hollywood film company made a $25,000 donation to the town, in gratitude for the cooperation the town extended this past summer during the filming of "The Witches of Eastwick."

Selectmen decided to take about $17,000 from the $21,000 remaining in the donation money, and assign it to the duck pond project. The remaining $17,000 needed to repair the pond will be included as a town

Landfall contracts awarded

The health board awarded two contracts Monday.

Gratta will provide cover material this year, for the municipal landfill at $4.64 per cubic yard, a price 21 cents cheaper than what the town is presently paying.

Cohasset expects to purchase 20,000 cubic yards of cover this year, for a total price tag of $92,800.

Civil Design Engineering won the job of engineering the capping of the municipal landfill.

The company will conduct inspections, monitoring and a topographic survey, for a price of $9,400.

Despite state conjecture that the landfill will have to close in three years, the board has projected continued operation of the municipal landfill for 11 more years.

Hull pact imminent

Sewer Commissioner Edward Guild said he believes an agreement with Hull is imminent.

"We have had four drafts of an agreement," he noted. Officials, led by Hull selectman Claudette Fitzsimmons, are working to hammer out the final draft.

At a recent meeting of selectmen and sewer commissioners from Cohasset, Hull and Hingham chaired by State Sen. William Golden, "everyone there was enthusiastic," Guild said.

Golden said he believes an agreement would be beneficial to both towns in terms of subsidies, according to Guild.

"Buying a piece of the Hull plant would be better than building one ourselves," he added.

Benjamin Bastianelli, a sewer commissioner from Hingham said he believes Hull has been "dragging its feet" with regard to an intermunicipal agreement.

Going to Hull, he noted, is a contingency plan for Hingham, an option in case larger plans fall through.

Hingham should learn soon from the state Supreme Court, whether or not the entire town will be accepted into the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA).

Bastianelli is optimistic Hingham will win acceptance, allowing the entire town to be sewered by the state agency.

If Hingham loses its case, building a treatment plant in Hingham for the Bonnie Brier part of town, or connecting to Hull are the most likely options.

Many questions regarding sewer situations in the tri-town area may be answered in February.

Linden Drive house plans

The health board approved house plans for a Linden Drive lot, where it had already approved plans for a house.

Developer David Chase sought to build a four-bedroom house on a different part of the lot, where he had planned previously to put a five-bedroom house.

Abutters, concerned about the effect such a move would have on area drainage, voiced their concerns.

"Drainage is a serious problem and a health concern there," said Michael Hardie of 351 Forest Avenue, "and it is complicated because of the subsurface rock in that area."

He noted, a "huge" puddle forms in his yard during rainstorms and takes 12 to 24 hours to drain.

Anne Hardie blamed neighborhood development for their drainage woes. "We've been punished," she said.

Chase said he believes a drain pipe which serves the neighborhood, "is not doing its job."

He suggested, "putting in a pipe above the leaching field (on the Linden Drive lot), would help the Hardie's water problem."

So the house lot that was approved for construction by the board was approved, again.

Election nomination papers

Nomination papers for the Town Election on April 11, are available at the Town Clerks office.

The last day to take out nomination papers will be Wednesday, Feb. 25, until 5 p.m.

All nomination papers must be submitted to the registrars of voters for certification of names on or before Friday, Feb. 27, before 5 p.m.

The last day to file nomination papers with Town Clerk will be Friday, March 13.

Notice to the Taxpayers

Feb. 12, the Treasurer-Collector's office will be processing all UNPAID 1986 REAL ESTATE TAX ACCOUNTS for Tax Title Liens. Letters with updated statements were mailed to those property owners Jan. 15.

Demands and warrants have been issued on all 1986 accounts. Over the past two years the Treasurer-Collector has been processing delinquent accounts in a more timely manner to bring them in line with the Massachusetts General Laws and the surrounding towns. Keeping these tax accounts more up to date has improved the town's cash flow and allowed the town to avoid borrowing in anticipation of tax revenue for the second year in a row.

For further information call the Treasurer-Collector's office at 383-0611. The office is located at the Town Hall, 41 Highland Avenue.

Police payroll complaints

Police Sgt. Richard Barrow informed selectmen that they have been overdrawing the police payroll and therefore "perjury is being committed."

The police sergeant alleges that selectmen, as guardians of the public funds, have made over-payments in the wages of the sergeant prosecutor and the department's detective.

According to Sgt. Barrow, there is a problem when the sergeant/court prosecutor and he work an overtime shift. The prosecutor will earn more per hour as the junior man, than Barrow as the officer-in-charge of the shift. It is the same when a senior officer works an overtime shift with the detective, he stated.

"Because the payroll money is being overdrawn, and more money is being paid than appropriated in this case, I feel that the intent of the payments are being abused, therefore perjury is being committed," Barrow stated in a letter to selectmen.

The police sergeant requested that town counsel review the matter "as my concern that the current method of calculation and compensation is entirely illegal."

Selectmen said the letter will be sent to labor counsel Robert Garrett for his review.

Richard Conley

Conley decides not to run

Richard Conley, who has held a seat on the Cohasset school committee for the past six years, will not seek re-election in April.

Saying that six years "is a long time," Conley announced his decision at Monday night's committee meeting. "It's time for some new ideas."

It was a sad night, Conley acknowledged. He had told his fellow committee members of his probable decision in the fall, but they had encouraged him to reconsider. It was time to make his decision public.

"I've had six enjoyable years here. It's been a pleasure to be associated with people like you," he told the four committee members and school administrators. "I was part of a team that attempted to improve our educational system and we did.

"You represent all that is good in Cohasset," the Holly Lane resident added. "I will miss looking forward to the things we have planned. But it's time for some new ideas."

Conley is a member of the Cohasset Fire Department.

Supt. Stephen Hart commented that Conley "always dealt with issues and with the public in a professional manner. "He certainly will be missed by the rest of our school family," he added.

Nomination papers are available for the three-year seat on the committee.

Nancy Sandell of Stevens Lane has taken out papers for the position. The former president and one of the originators of the Cohasset Parent Student Organization (PSO), Sandell will be making her first run for public office in Cohasset.

Health board disturbed about landfill contracts

The health board expressed concern Monday over the most recent round of monitoring reports on the Cohasset Heights landfill.

Chairman Michael Bliss called "disturbing" the increased levels of organic materials, such as tolulene, found in the testing wells by GHR Engineering, the landfill's consultants.

A review of GHR's report by town engineers was not available for Monday's meeting, but will be discussed at the board's next meeting, Feb. 9. However, Health Agent Joseph Godzik questioned the accuracy of the study.

He cited conflicting references in the report and noted, "Statements in the summary are generalized and are not all accurate; it makes you wonder about the entire validity of the report."

Bliss agreed, the "great variation in results" was confusing.

Godzik indicated, the increased level of organics found in the test wells, might have been caused by an overflow of leachate from the landfill's holding tanks.

"I have not seen leachate overflowing the tanks," he admitted, "but I saw some leachate breakout last Friday, when I was inspecting along with the people from the state air quality dept."

Michael Leon, the board's attorney suggested, "Maybe this means the collection system there is not working or is not adequate."

"...Or that the liner is not 100 percent efficient," Godzik added.

The landfill produces about 10,000 gallons of leachate per day; the liquid is collected and hauled off to a treatment facility in Lawrence, at a cost of $100,000 per month.

Godzik commented, when he and the air quality inspectors toured Cohasset Heights landfill, there were "no spectacular odors of note."

But the inspections were prompted by numerous complaints of suspicious odors by area residents.

"There's nothing like it," noted Ronald Goodwin, who operates his business, Goodwin Graphics just across the highway from Cohasset Heights. "It smells like gas, but worse. One day a woman leaving my shop came back in and told me to call the gas company, because she thought there was a leak."

Bliss commented, "It's important that we determine whether the odor they smell on Route 3A is the same as the odor at the pumping area."

The air quality inspectors left some stopper bottles with the Cohasset Fire Dept., Godzik noted, so firefighters can collect samples next time there is a complaint.

"My judgment is that the odors are probably coming from the landfill," Godzik told the board. "It's an obnoxious kind of odor, I think it smells mostly of leachate.

He said he suspects the odors escaped when workers at the landfill left the leachate tanks partly open while pumping, and they became bothersome to area residents, because inversion kept them from dissipating.

In a related matter, Leon told the board it must decide whether or not it wants to tie in the issue of a proposed treatment system with the landfill's application to expand.

Cohasset Heights has submitted an application to the state to start dumping in "Area 4A," a two-and-a-half acre parcel, which would lengthen the landfill's life by about two-and-a-half years.

"I think if you read the GHR report," Bliss said, "it's obvious these issues ought to be tied in together. I assume they would like to do the same with 4A as what they're doing now, trucking the leachate away; obviously, they can't handle it now and this addition would make it worse.

"There ought to be a mechanism in place for the board to know they're doing what they are supposed to do."

Leon commented, "The teeth are there; the board should check to see if Cohasset Heights is performing as it is supposed to, and if not, take action.

"I get the sense," he added, "that the DEQE (Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering) wants to get a complete application for the treatment system before it even considers the expansion into 4A. I'm really impressed by the DEQE's renewed sense of interest in the landfill."

If the state approves Cohasset Heights' treatment plant design, an estimated $1 1/2 million project, it will be up to the board to approve the amendment to the landfill's site assignment.

"I'm not sure we want to make a big issue of that," Leon said, "because the board has supported the installation of a facility which would produce class one discharge (drinking-water quality).

"Until the plan is approved by DEQE and by us," he added, "we shouldn't allow the opening of 4A."

Leon noted, although what has been proposed by GHR for treatment is an experimental system, the board's engineers at Camp, Dresser & McKee "think it's doable."

The board's main concern remains the effectivness of Cohasset Heights' leachate collection system.

"I'd like to find out if more can be done with regard to the collection system," Leon said.

"They can install a good system for 4A," Godzik commented, "but I don't think there's any way to improve the collection system that is there now."

Chief Brock proposes bylaws

article requiring that the town's boarding houses install automatic sprinkler systems.

A boarding house, he explained, is any establishment that rents rooms to persons unrelated to the owner of the building. Currently, Chief Brock said, there are two boarding houses in Cohasset without complete sprinkler systems, Kimballs by the Sea and the Red Lion. "They may have partial systems, but these two places do not have complete automatic sprinkler systems throughout the structures," the chief stated.

Among the other warrant articles proposed by the fire chief for the April town meeting is an appropriation of $45,000 to refurbish and upgrade Engine 3. According to the chief, the 1979 pumper is beginning to show signs of body rust. After talking with several companies, Chief Brock was told the engine could be repaired now and updated to include a four-inch hose. The company will also provide a mechanical review of the truck.

"If this pumper goes much longer, we've been told we'll have to replace the whole thing," Chief Brock said, noting that town meeting last April appropriated $138,000 for a new truck. That engine is due to arrive around Labor Dav. he said.

In addition, the fire chief intends to request $18,550 for the purchase of a new chief's cruiser. He made a similar request at the previous town meeting, but was told to delay the proposal after the funding for the fire engine was approved.

Fire Chief Brock also intends to submit a warrant article requesting $8,000 for a computer for the department. The table top computer would be used to store records and to provide training programs for the firefighters. Ambulance billing could be completed by the computer and statistics from the department would be accessible through the computerized system.

Selectmen accepted two warrant article petitions for the April town meeting. They must first be reviewed by town counsel before they are submitted into the warrant.

Frederick Laidlaw of Beechwood Street took a couple of hours last week to gather about 30 signatures requesting that the town "immediately and aggressively seek and pursue measures likely to manifest the cessation of operations and closing of the landfill site known as Cohasset Heights."

Laidlaw initiated the petition after talking with numerous residents "about their dissatisfaction with the dump." Cohasset Heights Ltd. is a privately-owned commercial landfill. For the past years, the local board of health, water commission and selectmen have been monitoring the landfill for possible contamination of the town's water supply in nearby Lily Pond.

"I don't live as close to the landfill as Lily Pond, but I am very concerned about this dump," Laidlaw commented. "It makes no sense to have a landfill located that close to the town's water supply.

"Whether town officials have been doing all they can about the situation is a matter of opinion," he continued. "I just don't know if every member of the board of selectmen, health board and water commission is as intent to close down that dump as they say. They're the ones who allowed the dump in the first place."

The petition, Laidlaw said, is a voters' initiative, designed to give local voters a collective opinion regarding this issue. "It's imprudent for a dump to be located there. I think the voters should express an opinion on it. With the town in a position of being sued by all sides, I think a mandate by the voters will back any town official who might want to close the facility."

The placement of Cohasset Heights, according to Laidlaw, is "outrageous. And the state and our town officials are just standing by, waiting for it to become a problem before they act."

Another petition article which will be included in the April warrant requests that the town amend the general bylaws so that a two-thirds majority of voters is necessary to appropriate or transfer funds for plans, drawings, research or studies "persuant to any future project or articles that will also require a two-thirds majority vote" at town meeting.

That article, if approved by town meeting, would affect plans proposed for Milliken Field, the town hall addition, and the police and fire station renovation project.

Corrections

Lot W. Bates of Red Gate Lane has taken out nomination papers for a three-year term on the sewer commission.

In last week's Mariner it was incorrectly stated that Bates intended to run for water commission. Bates' father, Lot E. Bates Jr. is an incumbent on the water commission. He does not intend to run for re-election.

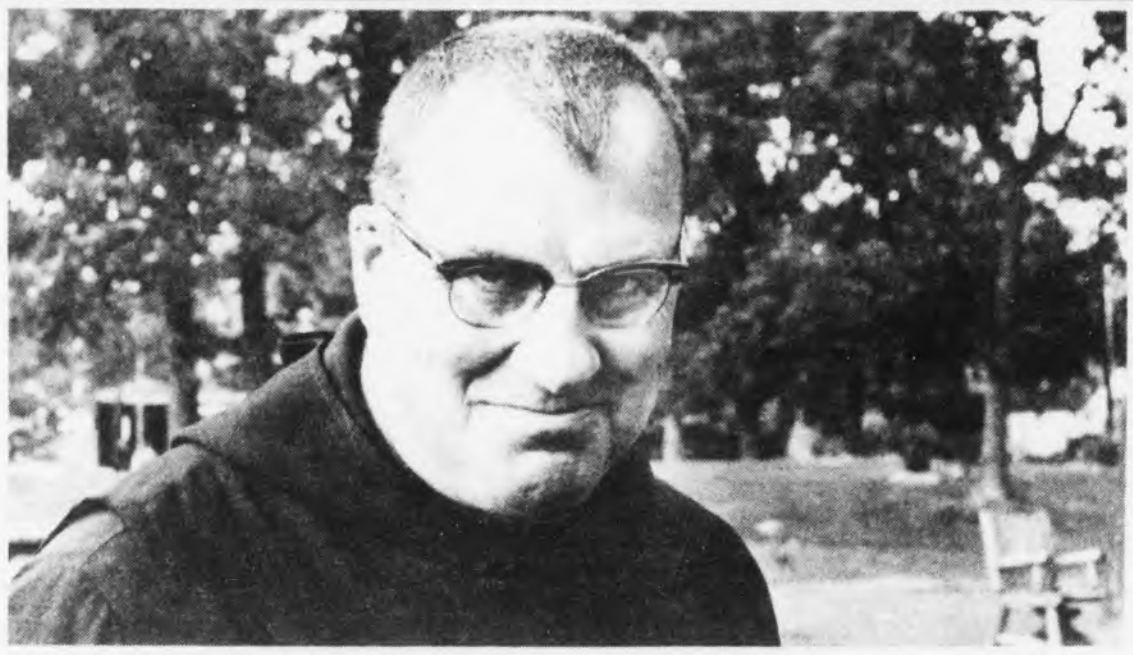
Newborn lamb named after Glastenbury monk

A newborn black lamb that was being carried by Brother Simon at the time of his death Monday morning, has been named after the beloved Glastonbury monk.

Brother Simon, 70, a longtime member of the Glastonbury Abbey, died early Monday morning as he rushed to tell his Brothers about the lamb's birth. Brother Simon, well known to local residents, had lived at the Abbey for about 30 years. He was the groundskeeper and cared for the many animals who live on the sprawling Hull Street property.

"He was the dearest, simplest and kindest man I have ever known," James Lagrotteria said this week. Lagrotteria, a native of Hull Street in Cohasset, is business manager at the abbey and had known Brother Simon for more than 20 years.

"He was so down to earth," Lagrotteria continued, "that you couldn't write a book about how wonderful this man was."



Brother Simon had arthritis and diabetes during recent years, so his activity had lessened. But his mind remained sharp, and his keen mind never failed despite his age. He had retired as the official groundskeeper for the Abbey, but continued to work and care for his animals.

His barnyard friends included Francis, a donkey he befriended for 20 years. Brother Simon also kept a flock of geese, lambs, and two dozen rabbits. He would spend winters painting birdhouses. "Simon must have made 40 of them," Lagrotteria said, "and he'd paint them yellow and red. The brighter, the better."

The Cohasset resident noted that his friend once gifted him with a walking gander which he named Simon. The gander became famous after he accompanied Langrotteria on two consecutive Columbus Day parades in Hingham. When friends at a local restaurant chided him about a 'walking gander' Lagrotteria allowed the goose to accompany him into the establishment.

"That Simon died of old age, too," Lagrotteria said. "I think I wore him out."

Animals were a favorite of Brother Simon, he noted. He would sit with the Abbey's animals for a half-hour at a time, feeding them from his hand. "He liked to feed them and talk to them. He liked people, too. But he said when he was with the animals he could talk and they never talked back to him."

Brother Simon J. Long, O.S.B.

The monk was a religious man. "Just his presence made a statement. You couldn't be around him and not be affected by him," Lagrotteria said. "He was a real good friend and I learned patience from him. He was a pretty good gardener, and he loved it. I learned some good tips from him - some good and some bad."

Brother Simon was particularly excited about the birth of this lamb, because it was the first black lamb that anyone at the Abbey could recall. "It was everyone's wish that the new lamb be called Simon," Lagrotteria said.

The Cohasset resident said he will miss the company of Brother Simon. "When I'd go on a short trip," he explained, "I would ask Simon to go with me. I loved to hear him talk. He was great company."

Brother Simon was a railroad enthusiast, who collected an extensive amount of model freight cars, passenger cars, engines, buildings and track. A native of Missouri, Brother Simon said he was a hobo as a youth and rode the rails like his idol, Boxcar Willie.

Brother Simon leaves two brothers, James Long and Oscar Long, both of California, and the 15 monks at the Glastonbury Abbey.

A funeral Mass was celebrated today, Jan. 29 in the Abbey's chapel. Burial was in the Abbey cemetery.

Salaries tie up 1987-88 school budget

Eighty-seven percent of next year's proposed budget for the Joseph Osgood School is tied up in salaries. With no new positions planned for next year, the greatest increases in the 1987-88 budget will be to replace textbooks for an increased enrollment in grades K through 3.

In the school committee's first review of the proposed budget, Supt. Stephen Hart explained that "just so much is tied up with salaries," noting that salaries comprise 83 percent of the total operating budget for the following year.

"Enrollment is stabilizing, and in fact increasing a bit. But no new positions are planned," Hart explained.

In addition, no new programs are proposed for the 1987 school year, Osgood Principal John Creamer stated. The anticipated $63,929 increase reflects replacement of equipment and texts rather than development of new curriculum.

According to Supt. Hart, the approximate seven percent increase in salaries, which includes negotiated pay raises and step increases, ate most of the nine percent Osgood School budget increases proposed for next year. And, he noted, texts and paper supplies tend to increase greater than the usual one and-a-half percent inflation rate.

Ken Ekberg, principal of the Deer Hill School, noted that his proposed budget, which will be reviewed next Monday night, includes a 6.8 percent increase. The budget breaks down into 89 percent for salaries, leaving only $1,626 for other operating increases.

In the Osgood School budget, the general supplies budget under the administrative account includes an increase to $4,600 for the purchase of paper supplies and utensils for the classrooms. Another $4,100 in the administrative account is Osgood's use of the system's new Zerox copying machine.

The total administrative account is $82,078, compared to last year's total of $77,820.

In each of the four grade levels, there are increased costs to purchase new texts and workbooks. In the kindergarten level, where the enrollment is expected to remain at 80 students, there is $270 allocated for books and $200 for listening center tapes.

A reading study committee, comprised of teachers at the school, decided that a new reading system which provided continuity between grades one and six, should be instituted. Because of the new system, $1,500 for the purchase of new texts was requested in grades one through three.

In addition, $365 was proposed to replace equipment in each of the three grades. The money, Principal Creamer explained, will be used to replace filmstrip projectors, record players and tape recorders.

In grade two, there is a financial offset given to the school for its participation in the METCO program. Supt. Hart explained that METCO, the program which buses Boston children into suburban schools, will likely provide the elementary school system with $23,063 next year. The total offset from METCO to the Cohasset schools next year will be about $50,000 for providing education to 48 students. These are the little-known benefits of this program, he explained.

In grade three, teaching supplies will increase to $4,945 and the textbook account will rise to $1,500 in anticipation of 15 additional students next year.

There is a proposed increase of $559 in the physical education department for the purchase of new equipment. And there is a $1,000 increase in the teaching supply account for the adjustment counselor for the upcoming year. School committee members noted that public should be made more aware of the efforts being made by Ed Leonard. They decided he could enlighten the community about his work later this year during a presentation to the committee.

The special needs account will increase 100 percent to $3,718 for next year. The greatest increase is in the teaching supplies account which will include a new teaching program in language development and self-help skills. Supt. Hart noted that although the formula has changed, the state does reimburse the town by a considerable amount.

In fact, the said, one of the teachers in the special needs department is paid through a federal grant.

The total Osgood budget increased from $706,281 this year to a proposed $770,210 next year.

Jane Goedecke, a member of the advisory board subcommittee assigned to the school budget, warned that an eight percent budget increase "is ambitious. Looking at the suggested increases in other town departments, they are quite big. Many things have to give. Can we prioritize, because along the way you will have to make the decision."

Committee chairman Joseph Nedrow said this is a dilemma the committee has previously confronted. "We feel we are the custodians of the educational program, and any changes made to that program should not be made without the town's benefit," he said, recalling that in the past, the committee has requested that town meeting approve a larger budget than recommended by the advisory board.

The Deer Hill budget will be reviewed Feb. 2.

Democrats to caucus Feb. 7

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will be holding a caucus on Saturday, Feb. 7, at 2 p.m. to elect delegates to the 1987 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Cohasset will be electing four delegates and four alternates, equally divided between men and women, to send to the Convention. The apportioned number of delegates has been allocated on the basis of a formula giving equal weight to the Democratic Party registration and the average vote for Democratic candidates in the last general elections for Governor and President for which figures were available at the time delegate tabulations were prepared.

Donna J. McGee, chairman of Democratic Town Committee,will call the caucus at the Cohasset Town Hall, Highland Street. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats, persons ineligible to register and media representatives. The only persons eligible to participate in any portion of the caucus are those who are registered Democrats in the ward or town as of December 30, 1986. There will be no absentee or proxy voting.

Candidates for delegate and alternate must also be present and give his or her written consent to be nominated and that nomination must be seconded by two persons present at the local caucus.

All ballots will be written and secret. Those candidates receiving the greatest number of votes on the first ballot will be elected.

Each candidate will be allowed to make a two-minute speech and to distribute on his/her behalf one sheet of paper listing qualifications and ideas.

Slate-making is allowed, but no special preference shall be given to slates. There is no quorum requirement for the caucus.

There will be no admission or expense charge at the caucus, although donations may be solicited.

Thompson honored by EPA

Douglas Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Thompson has been awarded the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Silver Medal for Exceptional Service. The Silver Medal is the second highest national award the Agency can bestow on one of its employees.

Thompson, who serves as an environmental protection specialist in EPA's New England Regional Office in Boston, was cited for his work in the area of wetlands protection.

In presenting the award, Deputy Administrator Jim Barnes said that Mr. Thompson was being recognized for "outstanding achievement in the protection of Sweeden's Swamp in Attleboro, Massachusetts resulting in a substantial contribution to the nationwide wetlands protection program."

Thompson heads EPA's wetland protection section for New England. He received the Silver Medal for technical work on which EPA based its decision to prevent the filling of the Attleboro wetland to build a shopping mall. This decision played a key role in establishing wetland protection as a top priority environmental issue at EPA.

Thompson has been with EPA since 1979. He has received two regional bronze medals for his work in wetlands protection. He is a resident of Ashland.

No school policy

It never used to be this way. But times have changed and our daily lives are not nearly so evenly-paced as they once were.

Getting children ready for school and sending them off on buses is just the start of Mom's hectic day. Once the kids are gone, it's time for her to get ready for work. For very few women, is there ever time to crawl back under the covers while the children are at school?

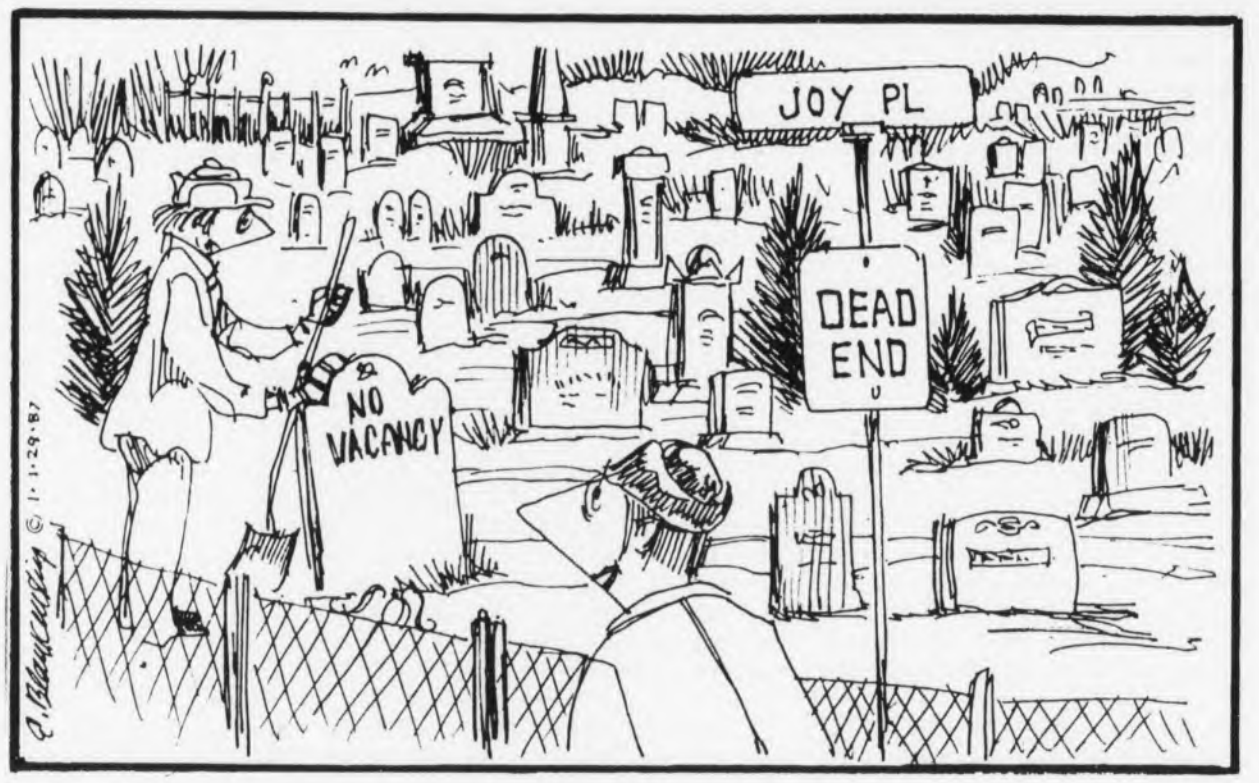
That's why it is so important for mothers to know when school has been canceled. If there is to be no school on a particular day, the parent must know immediately in order to alter his or her plans for the day. For a mother who works, having a child home unexpectedly calls for a flurry of preparations to provide proper childcare.

It is imperative a community be notified as soon as possible, and that means before 6:30 a.m., if there is no school that day. It is more than an inconvenience to help a child with breakfast and the day's clothing and cleansing, only to find out as he's about to exit there is no school.

If Mom does not stay home during the day, this is a huge dilemma that must be resolved before she is due in the office.

Police complain that parents should not call the local department for confirmation of no school announcements. And they are correct. Leave the police to real emergencies, traffic mishaps caused by the weather or medical aid calls.

It is the responsibility of the local school department to issue a decision as early as possible. The announcement should be made on as many radio stations, television stations and cable television airwaves as possible.



Perhaps it's true that no matter how good and well-intentioned the system, there are bound to be eventual breakdowns. Parents no doubt sometimes panic at the thought of waking to a foot of newly-fallen snow. One, they have to go through with those contingency childcare plans, and two, they have to count on extra travel time to the office.

But we must caution everyone, for there are bound to be more snow-days this fiesty season. Parents, do not call the police for no school announcements. Listen to the radio. Do not pick up the phone, unless it's to double-check with a neighbor.

And to the school administration we say, call the shots quickly. If in doubt, close the schools. But do it quickly enough so our high school students aren't out the front door before the announcement is flashed over the television screen.

Maybe we will get away with just one no-school day this winter. But we wouldn't bet on it. Let's all be prepared.

Kennedy Space center tragically revisited

By Elaine Allegrini
Staff writer

A year ago, we all watched in horror as the Challenger blew apart just after leaving its launching pad at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

This week, on the first anniversary of that tragedy, memories are rekindled.

At a time when thoughts return to that January day in 1986, I found it somewhat interesting last week to tour Kennedy Space Center and find no more than a passing hint of that space shuttle tragedy.

Kennedy Space Center encompasses a large area on a peninsula jutting out into the Atlantic Ocean from Florida's east coast. There are no homes around, a fact which was pointed out in a two-hour tour through the complex. There's no chance of endangering residents by any potential debris, tourists are told.

Visitors are more than welcome at the space center which offers many interesting and educational exhibits detailing the space program, its history, its accomplishments and its benefits to society.

Space travel, foreign to so many of us, became real as I walked through the rocket boosters and other large space age vehicles displayed at the entrance to the center. Viewing the displays, I was awed by the small craft which brought America's space pioneers on their journeys.

At the Kennedy Space Center, two tours are offered to visitors. Last week, when I was there, one tour was temporarily shut down because of "operational commitments." What that had to offer, I may never know.

Yes, the landing pads. They were next. As the bus approached, the driver identified landing pad A and landing pad B. Pad A, he said, was the launching site for six successful missions. Pad B was the launching sit of one mission - the Challenger. "And you all know what happened," the driver remarked.

That was it. That was all Kennedy Space Center had to say about the Challenger tragedy that took the lives of seven astronauts just one year ago.

The tour resumed; Pad B was behind us. But, ahead, there was more to remind us of that fateful Jan. 28, 1986. There, 3 1/2 miles from the launch site, was the viewing area. The simple bleachers for family and friends were just a short distance from the press area.

Remember, last year, watching the families react to the explosion of Challenger? They were in those bleachers, 3 1/2 miles from the launch site.

I came away from my visit to Kennedy Space Center a little more aware of the workings of the space program. But, like people everywhere, I will never forget Jan. 28, 1986 and launch Pad B. "And you all know what happened."

In support of Manny Salvador

To the Editor:

I first met Manny Salvador many years ago. As lobstermen, he and I both shared the same fishing grounds. He has always been someone you felt good to know was out there with you on the open seas.

I really got to know Manny about two years ago when there was a lot of fuss made about the quality (or lack of it) of Cohasset Harbor's dangerous fecal coliform counts. He has always been concerned about pollution and clean water. He has constantly worked above and beyond human capabilities to insure that a very old and incompetent sewage treatment plant operated at its maximum effectiveness level.

It boggles my mind that the "sewage commissioners" have suspended Mr. Salvador. I do not know all of the details, but Manny was on an authorized vacation and a licensed operator (whose temporary position was approved by the town) was on duty during his absence. I find it hard to believe that Manny should be held responsible for the plant during his vacation.

I also cannot comprehend how a town can suspend an employee of sixteen years, and a man of Mr. Salvador's age, after all he has done, working for so long with a sad sewerage situation and helping the town look so good.

My only real problem with the "situation" is that I am not a Cohasset resident and thus cannot run for "sewer commissioner" in your town. I hope that all Cohasset is behind Manny Salvador and will band together to set things right!

Manny, get well quickly!

Robert A. Thorndike
Minot

P.S. For Mr. Desantis' benefit, I am now a full voting member of the Scituate Conservation Commission.

Where to go when you need local historical interest

By David Wadsworth
Historical Society Curator

Recent years have seen a proliferation of volunteer organizations — in both the private and public sectors of the town — dedicated to historical preservation and to the increase of public awareness of Cohasset's unique history as an old New England village.

At first glance, the names of these several public-spirited organizations may seem quite alike, enough alike to cause more than a little confusion on the part of citizens of the town. Sometimes it seems difficult to sort out one historical group from the others, or to know which group to seek out for answers to a specific question relating to the world of history.

In reality, each group has a clearly-defined niche in Cohasset's environment, and its own set of goals, sometimes quite different from other historical organizations of deceptively similar sounding names.

Here is a brief description of several public and private historical organizations active in Cohasset today, offered in the hope that this may help to clarify the situation and alleviate the understandable confusion engendered by the several similar sounding names. Organizations in the private sector will be described first, then those having the status of public agencies.

The Cohasset Historical Society. Incorporated in 1928 as a lineal descendant of an earlier public committee called The Committee On Town History (itself established by a vote of Town Meeting in 1984), the Historical Society dedicates itself to the preserving and presenting of Cohasset's own history. Funded almost entirely by private donations, the Society is a volunteer organization maintaining three historical buildings which serve as museums.

The Society also maintains a library of local and area history, has an extensive archives of Cohasset-related historical documents and other source records, and owns a unique collection of antique gowns. The Society's three historical buildings are the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and the Maritime Museum at Cohasset Center (both open to the public during summer months), and the Caleb Lothrop House (a merchant's 1821 Georgian-style home), its headquarters on Summer Street. The Society's library and archives, as well as its administrative office, are found at the Lothrop House, itself open to the public by appointment. At Cohasset Center, the Capt. Wilson House is an 1810 Sea Captain's home retaining many of the characteristics of an early 19th century Cohasset dwelling. The Maritime Museum houses an extensive collection of artifacts, pictures and documents relating to Cohasset's history as a seafaring town during America's "Age of Sail." Also found there is a large general collection of artifacts and documents dating from the town's early years.

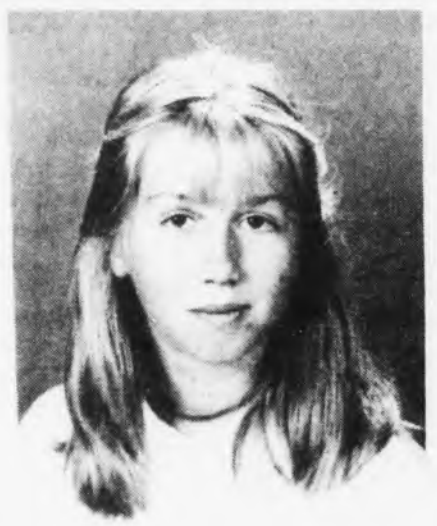
The Cohasset Historic Trust is the outgrowth of a quasi-private town committee which funded and directed Cohasset's Town Bicentennial celebration in 1970. The Historical Trust is dedicated to the establishing and maintaining of an historical library, archive and research facility for the use of local and area residents. Its facilities and headquarters are at the Historical Society's Caleb Lothrop House. The Trust has provided funding for development of the Society's library and archives facility, and maintains its own archive relating to local and area theatrical history. Named in honor of Helen Howes Vosoff, one of the founders of Cohasset's tradition of theater and drama, the Trust's archive contains records anad artifacts relating to Hanlon Bros. pantomine company (a Cohasset-based professional travelling theater company of the late 19th century), also records of the South Shore Players (Cohasset's professional summer theatre of the 1930's to 1950's), as well as the archives of the South Shore Music Circus and of the Cohasset Dramatic Club. The Historic Trust itself is funded in part by the South Shore Playhouse Associates, the parent organization of today's Music Circus. In the public sector, several town-appointed agencies also are active in the domain of local history and historical preservation.

The Cohasset Historial Commission, established by vote of Town Meeting in the mid 1970's has made a comprehensive inventory of the historical assets of Cohasset, researching and listing several hundred of the town's earliest and most important buildings, structures and sites, as well as more recent buildings having unique architectural value. The Commission has researched and developed the "Captains' Walk," an historial walk around the edges of the town's harbor. Large, permanent maps of the harbor as it appeared during the Age of Sail have been placed at several locations near the harbor, and a number of historical sites have been marked by smaller signs. The Historical Commission also has sponsored the restoration of the town's original Town Clock at the common, has worked with other town agencies in developing an historical archives for Cohasset's early public records, and has encouraged preservation of several historically important public buildings.

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission, also established by vote of Town Meeting during the latter 1970's, acts as a regulatory agency to maintain appropriate architectural and esthetic values in a defined area comprised of the town's historic Town Common and its environs. The Historic District Commission oversees and regulates changes to buildings, structures and grounds in an area around the Common, extending approximately from Sohier Street at the north end to Depot Court at the south end of the Common. This Commission may hold Public Hearings on matters of substantial importance relating to the area within the Common District, and functions as a particular type of zoning board as defnined by the town's By-Laws.

The Cohasset Constitutional Bicentennial Committee, a town-appointed committee established in 1986, seeks to encourage and assist the town's citizens in participating in the nationwide observance of the 200th anniversary of our nation's Constitution. Through the work of this committee, Cohasset has received official recognition as a Designated Bicentennial Community. The Bicentennial Committee will remain active for the duration of the national Bicentennial observace, extending through 1991. The Committee's goal is to increase public awareness of the significance and importance of the Constitution as the founding document of our nation.

These, in brief, are the organizations in Cohasset actively concerned with preserving and presenting the unique history of our town and of the greater national community of which Cohasset is one part.



The Scoop on Soupes

At Monday night's meeting of the Cultural Exchange Committee, chairman Judy Keim asked committee members to make every effort to encourage town wide participation in the various visits and exchanges between Cohasset and her sister city in France, Souppes-sur-Loing.

Keim spoke warmly of the committee's official visit to Souppes last October. "The several days we spent with our friends in Souppes was a very special time for all of us. Soupciennes surrounded us with the warmth and love of genuine friendship; they could not do enough for us, nor could they learn enough about us. We met a number of Souppes families who do not anticipate an opportunity to visit Cohasset in the next few years; yet, they are eager for us to visit with them. They are especially interested in the myriad possibilities of personal enrichment for the children of both nations," she said.

Certainly the idea of receiving individuals from foreign nations is not new to Cohasset residents. What is unique in our sister city relationship is the opportunity for reciprocity of families and individuals. Although several visits between the two towns are being planned now for this summer, the committee would like to see more Cohasset people get involved.

Vice Chairman Mildred Mitman noted, "The nature of creative exchange possibilities for our sister cities to explore are endless. I have received several inquiries regarding such things as a house exchange, senior citizen exchange, school groups of all ages and individual families. We hope that all of our residents will think about how they might want to personally take advantage of this program."

Maxine Parmelan, the 13-year old from Souppes Sur Loing who will visit with the Martin family this summer.

One member of the committee pointed out that unlike the French culture, our young people, 16-20 years old, would be forced to sacrifice significant earning power during the summer months in order to take advantage of the rewards that beckon them abroad.

However, in spite of this problem, a number of correspondences are taking place, and to date, two visits have been confirmed. Sixteen-year-old Godefrey Dine will stay with the Langmaid family on Beechwood Street for the month of July. Young Jamie Langmaid plans to return with Godefrey to Souppes for the month of August and travel with him and his family throughout Europe.

Thirteen-year-old Maxine Parmelan will visit for a month with the Martin family on South Main Street. Kristen Martin is uncertain of her plans for a reciprocal visit.

Stephane Dine, an 18-year-old Soupcienne in his second year of hotel school in Paris, would like the opportunity to visit with a Cohasset family for a month this summer, and at the same time, experience the restaurant/hotel business in this country.

In exchange, Stephane's family has invited a young person (18-20 years old) to visit with them during the month of July or August. In addition to their homes in Souppes and Paris, the Dines have an apartment on the Mediterranean where they enjoy horseback riding, tennis and sailing. Stephane's request for a job in a hotel or restaurant for a month is unique, as is his family's reciprocal invitation.

Anyone interested in arranging an exchange with the Dines should contact Weezie Welz (383-9192) or Elizabeth Warren (383-0336).

In addition, the committee has on file several other Souppes families and individuals who are interested in either hosting or visiting this year.

In other business of the Cultural Exchange Committee, selectman have appointed two new members; Weezie Welz of 12 Windsor Road, and Barbara Hislop of 72 Jerusalem Road.

Cohasset's Vo-Tech assessment declines 33 percent

The regional school committee of South Shore Vocational Technical High School last week approved a $3,544,466 budget for the 1987-88 school year.

The proposed budget is up 7.5 percent from this year's budget.

At last Wednesday's public hearing, attended only by two town officials from the eight member towns—Hanover Selectman A. Donald Deluse and Hanover Advisory Committee member Philip Frank—Superintendent Clifford Easton said he strived to keep the budget down.

"That was our goal this year, to keep the increase at 7.5 percent," he said. "In doing so we did sacrifice some things, not curriculum-wise but equipment-wise.

"We wanted to come in with an increase of around 10.7 percent," he said. "That's where we thought we could live. But we made the cuts to reach our goal."

The largest increase was in the $2.4 million salaries budget, up 9.2 percent. Easton said contractual raises and the funding of four new positions led to the increase.

The towns with decreased assessments are: Cohasset, $24,187, 33.4 percent decrease (7 students, down 5); Norwell, $52,380, 21.6 percent (16 students, down 5); Rockland, $259,363, 7.9 percent (77 students, down 13); and Scituate, $118,941, 4.2 percent (35 students, down 5).

The budget now must be approved by six of the eight member towns at town meetings this spring.

'Cruisers' escape with Abington win

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

With three seconds left in the game, Cohasset's Mat Maloney rebounded Bryan Edwards' missed shot and put in an easy lay up to give the Skippers a 62-60 victory over Abington last Friday night.

Cohasset maintained an 8 to 10 point lead throughout the first half but the lead was cut down in the second half due to Abington's phenomenal shooting. In fact the Skippers trailed by three with three minutes left in the game but thanks to a basket by Bryan Edwards, a foul shot by Mike Smith and the buzzer beating basket by Mat Maloney, Cohasset came out on top.

Bryan Edwards led all scorers with 22 points followed by Tom Larson who had 12 points and a great offensive rebounding game as well. Mike Smith and Mat Maloney also turned in good efforts for Cohasset as well. Coach Ed Minelli was happy with this game and felt the victory was good for his team psychologically because it showed that they are able to come from behind to win.

Saturday, the Skippers blew by Whitman/Hanson 71-60. In this "run and gun" game, Cohasset controlled the tempo early and maintained its intensity throughout the contest.

Minelli felt Mike Smith had the best game of his career thus far registering 23 points, 13 rebounds and four blocked shots as well as dominating both ends of the court. Tom Larson also had an impressive game with 17 points and eight rebounds. Both David Shultz and Mat Maloney played well defensively, and Jason Marsac turned in some quality minutes off the bench.

With the best overall record in the league 10-2, the Skippers were ranked the number 1 team in division 3 according to the Boston Herald. Minelli feels his team is now entering into a key stretch of games as they face Duxbury on Tuesday and Norwell on Friday. Both games should prove to be both challenging and exciting for Cohasset.

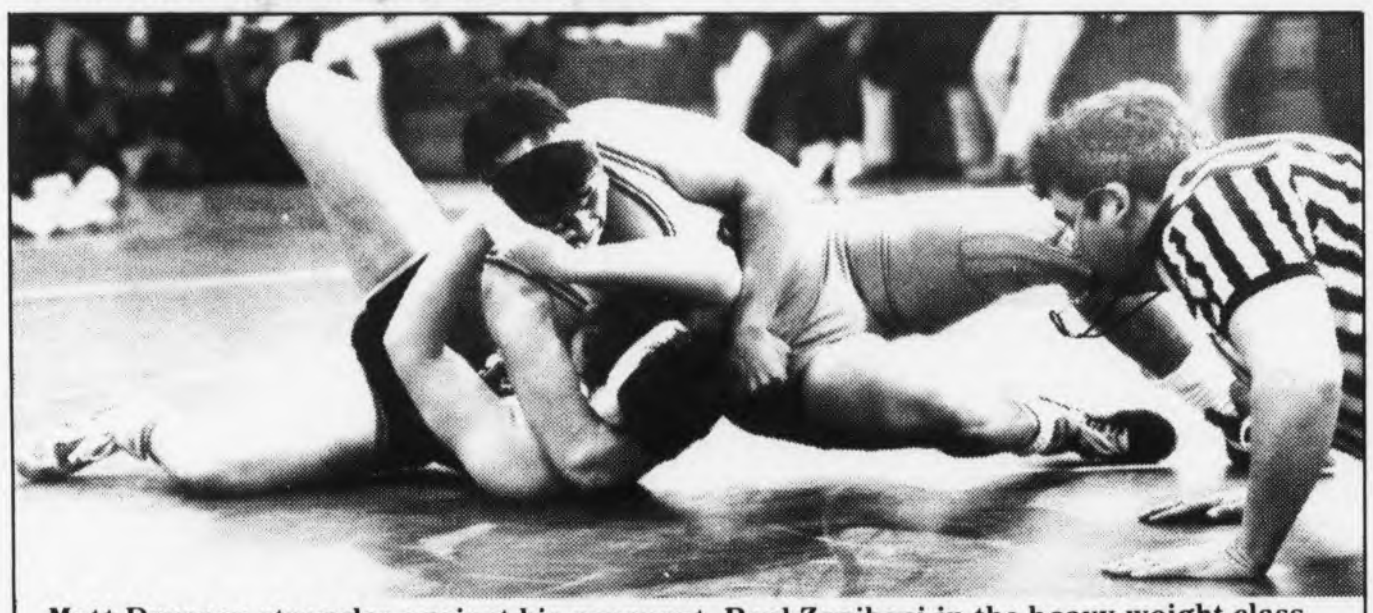
Girls Basketball

Tuesday, the girls overpowered Abington and beat them 52-36. Coach Bill Fallon felt the key to the victory was his team's tenacious defense which held Abington to a mere 11 points in the first half.

Margie Murphy led the team offensively with 14 points followed by Maureen O'Leary who had 10. Fallon cited Melissa Shea as having a tremendous game especially off the boards as Melissa pulled down 12 rebounds for the Skippers.

Cohasset continued its winning streak by crushing Whitman/Hanson, 55-40. Fallon felt his team ran the ball well and played solid defense; but the key to the win was the second quarter when Cohasset outscored Whitman/Hanson by a margin of 19-5.

Once again Margie Murphy led all scorers with 16 points and dominated both ends of the court. Cindy Spooner with 10 points had a strong game along with Liz O'Leary who controlled the team well from the point.



The girls now stand at 11-1 and a win on an inexperienced Duxbury team on Tuesday will qualify Cohasset for the state tournament. Friday, the Skippers take on a much improved Norwell squad.

Hockey

After previously losing to Rockland, Saturday the boys hung on tough and pulled away with a 3-3 tie. Coach Dennis Walsh was very pleased with the effort of his team and felt the boys played up to their full potential in order to pull themselves out of their losing slump. Walsh believed that Cohasset skated and passed the puck very well in this game but more importantly showed a much improved positive attitude.

Craig Mulcahy scored Cohasset's first goal followed by Todd Fitzpatrick and Jeff Hartwell. Danny Pompeo assisted all three of Cohasset's goals.

The Skippers must win 4 of their last 6 games in order to qualify for the state tournment. Walsh feels his team has a very good shot at fulfilling these requirements in order to make the tournament. Wednesday the Skippers are expecting a win over a very weak Whitman/Hanson team, and on Saturday the boys take on the league leading team Hanover.

Second Congregational Church

Dear Friends,

Saying "Good-bye" is a thing that few of us like to do. The word itself brings associations to grief and loss, and saying it somehow makes those associations suddenly real. Saying good-bye to all of you in Cohasset is difficult in just such a way. I have appreciated the open way in which you have received me as your interim pastor. We have worked together toward a fuller ministry of Christ. But more than that, I have made many friends among you. On a feeling level, I leave both a job and the closeness of real community.

I rejoice in the new life that you will have in the coming years with your new minister. I ask that you give your fullest attention and participation to this new start. As for me, I intend to become an active participant in a local church. Another interim ministry is certainly a possibility as I pursue my counseling interest. As we go our separate ways, I feel sure that the time we have spent together will become a good memory for us. And perhaps we need not say "Good-bye," but "Farewell," as we will remain connected in spirit.

With warmest feelings,
Rev. Doug Wheeler

Their message is an old-fashioned one of "good, clean living" free of alcohol, tobacco, and hard drugs.

Last summer four of these men appeared on the TV show "People Are Talking" told how they as "religious persons" cope with the problems of today in sports, marriage and in raising their children.

Mike Dowling television sportcaster will host the Sunday night forum, to be held at the Wellesley Middle School in Wellesley, Mass at 7 p.m.

The public is invited. Admission is free.

School Committee briefs. . .

The school committee approved the acceptance of a state grant to the Deer Hill School. The school was adopted by the state Department of Education as a site for the Lucretia Crocker Grant Program.

With this grant, Joy Buhler, an educator from Cape Cod, will share a new training and support program for five to six teachers at the school. A core group of teachers will meet with Buhler, working on the development of curriculum which will enhance the creative and anlytical skills of students. February 26 will be the first day for teachers to meet with Buhler regarding this innovative program called Project Barn/Cod.

Deer Hill Principal Kenneth Ekberg explained that several substitute days will be necessary once this 'core' group of teachers begins working with Buhler. Although he has applied for a state grant to fund these substitutes, Ekberg asked the school committee to temporarily fund the extra salaries at a cost of about $600.

Under this state grant, Buhler's time to the school will be free. The concept of Project Barn/Cod is for teachers to develop activities for courses that will help students develop higher level thinking skills. After the activities and lessons have been reviewed by Buhler, the teachers will then implement them in the classroom.

The Lucretia Crocker grant became available to schools through the state reform legislation passed last year. Several school systems throughout the state competed for the grant funding.

In other school committee business, Supt. Stephen Hart explained that recent engineering tests in the land off Pleasant Lane, a possible site for housing for retarded adults, were not positive.

The school department owns several acres of land off Sohier Street behind the Deer Hill and Osgood schools. School officials have indicated their willingness to donate a specific portion of the land for the housing, if it is buildable. The most recent engineering tests completed on a certain portion of that land off Pleasant Lane, "were not encouraging," Supt. Hart stated. Any further tests have been postponed until the summer.

In the meantime, he noted, there is an indication that a tract of land owned by an individual may be available for the state housing program. But for now, Supt. Hart said, the negative engineering results have delayed any school department assistance with the program.

Lunch price increase

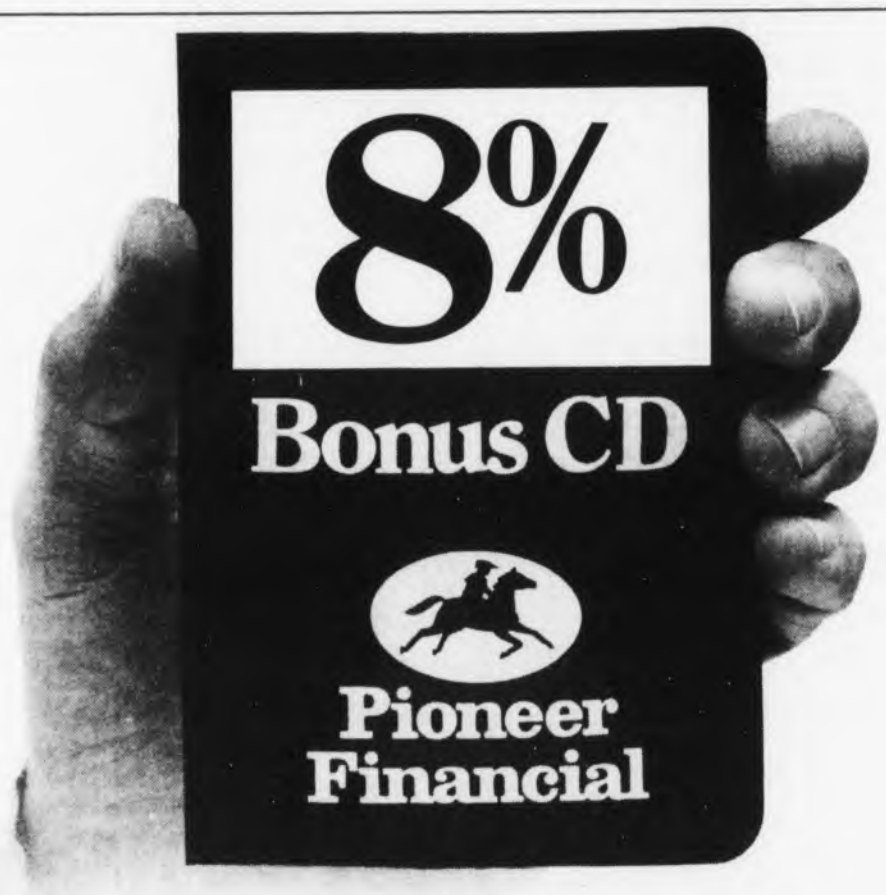
Mothers who send their kids off to school with a dollar for lunch seldom expect change. Now it's official.

The school committee voted Monday night to increase the price of school lunches from 85 cents to $1. School committee members say that shouldn't be too steep an increase, because many parents now do not receive the change when they send their kids to school with a dollar.

The increase is necessary, Supt. Stephen Hart said, to increase revenues brought in by the school lunch program. The participation is not down dramatically, he said, but there are fewer students in the system. Many other area school systems currently charge $1 for lunch.

The superintendent said along with a price increase, thought should be given to what is offered for meals, and what students prefer. Hot dogs, hamburgers and pizzas are the "big sellers," he said, and in order to attract more business, the schools may have to offer that selection more frequently.

Committee members Diana Kornet and Barbara Bliss said they have spoken to private food service vendors, who have expressed an interest in operating a lunch service for the school system. Kornet suggested that at the end of the year, one of these vendors make a presentation to the committee. She suggested a private food service might be more economical in the future.



But committee member Richard Conley opposed such an idea, saying the cafeteria is one of the schools' few self-supporting departments. Any programs he has viewed by private companies, are not better than what is presently offered by the Cohasset school cafeterias. He argued that the school lunch program is not "supported to the level it should be. This may be a case of us looking to help them, instead of they subsidizing us," Conley added.

The lunch price increase will become effective at the next change of semesters. Milk will remain 20 cents individuals, but to create an on-going flow of contributions from as many people as possible on an annual basis," he explained.

Halfway-mark reached on Center plans . . .

The efforts begun this year have resulted in the tripling of community center memberships. "That also results in an increased awareness by the public of our efforts and of the center itself," Jordan added.

The coordinator explained that above everything else, the community center exists not for a board of directors, or a limited membership, but for the entire town. Its extensive and varied class schedule, individual programs and facilities exist for use by everyone in the community, he said.

"In the old ays, we had senior citizens and a nursery school and gymnastics. But the center has tremendous community-wide appeal and the level of activity now makes us burst at the seams," Jordan stated.

The Cohasset Community Center, Jordan said, succeeds because Cohasset is a town that enthusiastically supports a wide variety of class schedules.

'Unsung heroes' such as office manager Judy Volungis, coordinate the class schedules and instructors. The board of directors decides what courses should continue, based on their appeal. But it is Volungis who often develops the classes and locates an instructor.

Nursery school director Leslie Sullivan, bowling supervisor George Brooks, and Senior Center director Kathy Bryanton, are equally responsible for the town-wide appeal and success of the center, Jordan noted.

Volungis attempts to create a class schedule that is unusual and appeals to a broad audience, he noted. Classes include gourmet cooking for pre-schoolers, basket-weaving using trees native to this area, chess for children, landscape design, designing an investment portfolio, and first aid classes. For the senior citizens, there is a wide variety of classes, seminars and special events at the senior center, located within the community center.

"They needed a space, and we wanted to retain townwide appeal. So we made space for them permanently. They came in with Kathy who has established programs with a great deal of substance. In fact, they are at such a level of success, the senior center needs to expand their space within the community center," he added.

The plans for the new community center at this point, Jordan explained, will just about triple the amount of classroom space. The nursery school will be relocated in the downstairs along with administrative offices. The McElwain Hall will be expanded to hold gymnastics classes on a permanent basis - no more alternating the facility between the pre-school and the afternoon gymnastics.

The nursery school, a mainstay of the community center, will include a separate entrance on the lower end of the building. The large room will be bright with lots of windows, he stated.

A 4,000 square-foot function room will be available to community organizations and groups, and a large reception area will be constructed on the first floor. A board of directors room will also be available for use by town boards and committees for meetings.

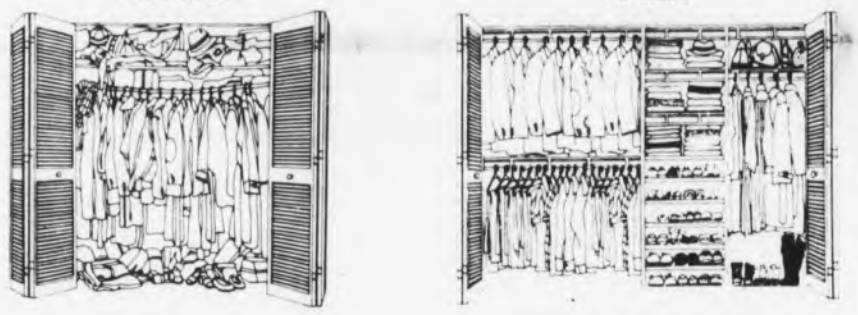
"Our most important goal," Jordan said, "is that the community center be used. We want this new facility to be used day and night and weekends."

The gym, which may include a recreational basketball court, could be used on weekends by local teens or for father-son games, Jordan envisioned. The community center should be a place where teens could go on weekend nights for a basketball or ping-pong game, or a bowling match.

The construction is set to begin in June, after the spring semester of nursery school is completed. With fingers crossed, Jordan said the project should be nearing completion by early autumn. The building will be closed at least for part of the summer, with a minor impact on the activities within the senior center.

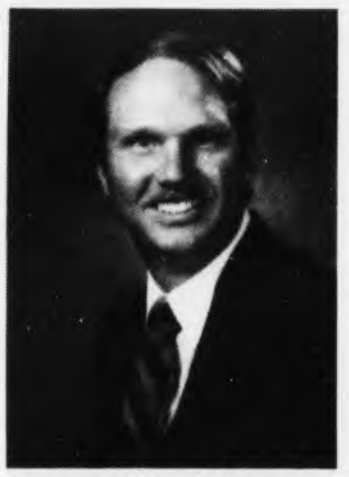
"Eve yone wants to see this succeed," Jordan stated. "and in a small community, everyone should know that an individual can make a difference. We're soliciting support from individual residents, as well as organizations. A facility like the community center should be used by everyone. That's our goal."

Dramatic Club to perform 'Present Laughter'



For the second production of the 1986-87 season, the Cohasset Dramatic Club will present Noel Coward's comedy, "PRESENT LAUGHTER". The director is Judy Holmes.

The action revolves around Gary Essendine, a popular and pampered actor, who is busy making preparations for an extended international tour. First his apartment, and his life, is invaded by Daphne, a stagestruck youngster who further complicates his already percolating menage. Add his wife, his friends and partners, his secretary, an outspoken butler, a vague Swedish housekeeper . . . sprinkle throughout an intense aspiring playwright and the confusion abounds, becoming merrily and wittily complicated.



Club president, John Kuhn, will don dressing gown to Gary, the actor, through the hoops while Joan Scorgie plays wife Liz. The cast is ably rounded out by David Barrett as butler, Fred; Ellen Kelly as housekeeper, Erikson and Virginia Barcomb as Gary's sanity and secretary, Monica. Scott Ketchan makes an appearance as the brash playwright, Roland Maule,while the actor's social set is complemented by Sarah de Lima as the femme fatale, Joanna; Gregory Bouchard as Morris Dixon and Bob Kilborn as Hugo Lyppiatt. Jane Higbee plays Daphne while Barbara Elliott makes an appearance as Daphne's guardian, Lady Saltburn. The set designer is Arthur Johnson.

Performances take place at the Cohasset Town Hall Feb. 27, 28, March 6 and 7. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Lack of burial grounds space spurs T.M. article

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

"We can't wait six or seven years before we do anything, or we'll really be in a box."

According to Glenn Pratt, chairman of the cemetery committee, Cohasset is running out of burial grounds. Pratt and his colleagues will seek $2,500 at the annual town meeting to fund research of town lands and determine an appropriate site for a new cemetery.

"It began in 1979," he recalled, "when the selectmen got the feeling, based on a planning board study, that the life of local cemeteries would last only six to eight more years. About eight years have gone by since then."

A total of 360 graves remain available for sale and use in Cohasset, Pratt said. An average of 75 to 100 graves in town are filled each year, though many of those are already owned and not included in the 360.

"Within six or seven years," he added, "there will not be a grave lot to buy in town."

Central cemetery, which is operated by a private association, also is filled to capacity, with no room to expand.

Ralph Perroncello, the superintendent there noted, the organization is considering constructing a new columbarium, a vault with niches for urns containing ashes of the dead.

Pratt maintained, columbariums are not popular in Cohasset. Either way, it's a grave situation; the town is quickly running out of room to bury its deceased.

According to Pratt, the state specifies, each town must provide burial grounds for its residents. State laws do not permit regional graveyards.

At Beechwood cemetery, he said, there is enough land to add 600 graves. However, much of it is wetlands, and current laws do not allow graves to be constructed within a watershed, for health reasons.

"The cement vaults which hold the caskets," Pratt said, "would deteriorate within 80 to 100 years, but embalming fluids do not break down in that amount of time."

The committee has suggested filling a strand of turf at Woodside cemetery as a short term solution; it would provide about 60 graves. "It would take a year to get permits," he said.

But the committee has its eye on the future, because the task ahead is tough. Half the land area in town lies within the watershed, Pratt noted, and much of the rest is either developed, part of Wompatuck State Park or is owned by the trustees of reservations. "It's tough to find anything."

The committee hopes to find a parcel 20 to 25 acres, which would last the people of Cohasset another 50 years or so, he said.

Through a preliminary search for land which offers both size and accessibility, committee members identified several sites they will consider for the development of a new cemetery: a parcel on Beechwood Street, east of Route 3A; the "school facilities" land off South Place; a plot east of North Main Street, owned by the Barnes family; the 250-acre Richardson-White parcel, which borders four or five streets; parts of the Cohasset golf course; a 50-acre plot off the "black rock" section of Jerusalem Road; or an expansion of North Cohasset cemetery.

The study for which the committee is seeking funding, will determine which site is best. Then, will begin the "long procedure" of land taking.

Site development will follow, Pratt added, and with the abundance of rock ledge in town, that job promises to be expensive and time-consuming, as diggable dirt will have to be brought in.

Costs will not only include purchase of the land, but he noted, "We will have to cut the grass for the rest of eternity."

Pratt will suggest to selectmen, a cemetery commission be formed "to get the legal ball rolling.

"There's a lot of work to be done," he added. "I think it's going to be an interesting project."

Fitness preview: More than just physical fitness

By John Loupos
Special to the Mariner

There is a great deal that can be said in favor of America's infatuation with physical fitness. Unarguably exercise can be stress reductive, and although a sound body doesn't guarantee a sound mind and spirit, it is a step in the right direction.

On a deeper level this trend represents a healthy recognition of the need for balance within one's lifestyle. Not to malign many of the currently popular activities, jogging, biking, aerobics being examples, but many individuals work hard (as in career) then play hard (as in exercise) and still end up feeling their fitness needs somehow unmet.

Genuinely physical fitness involves a balance, or wholeness which entails more than just "physical" fitness. The Chinese recognized a need for this balance centuries ago, though from a different perspective. They recognized physical exercise was necessary to balance their pursuits of the spirit.

These same "physical fitness" systems are available today, generically regarded martial arts. The emphasis on holistic balance varies from school to school and as with anything else it's wise to shop around before enrolling.

The aforementioned health and self defense systems are preserved and taught in their purity at the Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy in Cohasset which offers a multi-faceted program.

Ongoing programs include Chinese Kung Fu and Tai Chi Chuan. Extracurricular programs in meditation and stress management are available (see accompanying article). The goal of the school is to develop healthy well-balanced individuals who also know how to defend themselves.

Stress management is big business. The reason it is big is because we are a society inundated with stress. We're a high tech society with high stress, and it has become clear to medical authorities and also to the business community that stress doesn't pay in terms of health or productivity.

High tech society's response to high tech stress is, you guessed it, high tech stress management in the form of pharmaceuticals, bio feedback devices, sophisticated home exercise equipment, etc.

But there is an alternative, and it's extremely low tech. There's no equipment involved and once you have it, it remains yours to use whenever you need it. It's called "Chi Kung".

As far back as 8000 years ago there was a particular sect of Chinese known as Taoists. Briefly stated these Taoists sought spiritual immortality by meditating to purify themselves. During their meditations they discovered and observed the subtle forces of CHI (life force) energy moving throughout the body. These discoveries in fact foreran modern acupuncture which is premised on the same CHI energy.

The Healing Tao is a multi-faceted system of meditation and body work pratices all of which begin with what is called the Microcosmic Orbit Meditation. The Microcosmic can be learned by almost anyone in a weekend workshop. It awakens the body's two primary acupuncture channels and links them up so they move throughout the body in an orbital pattern.

These various Healing Tao practices are relatively simple to learn and they provide the individual very quickly with an effective means of reducing stress and its effects. Workshops and classes in Healing Tao meditation and Chi Kung are scheduled on a regular basis at the Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy in Cohasset.

Feb. 21/22 the Academy will host a series of workshops to be taught by Tao Master Mantak Chia. For further information, please call the Academy at 383-6822.

(John C. Loupos is the owner and chief instructor at the Wah Lum Kung Fu Academy of Cohasset.)

Therapeutic massage is more than a back rub

By Davida Sydney
Special to the Mariner

A great many people are currently interested in therapeutic massage and with good reason.

Beyond the many benefits from a purely physical health perspective, massage provides the opportunity to bring one into that place of stillness from which meaning and creative action naturally proceed.

Most people think of massage as a glorified back rub, but therapeutic massage can go far beyond the traditional kneading and stroking that most of us associate with muscle work. It is a true healing art.

It is known to increase pain-free movement, free respiratory congestion, reduce stress, increase blood circulation, relieve muscle limitation, reduce inflammation, and release pent-up emotion.

However, the effects need not stop there. Essentially all pain and dis-ease result from holding on to patterns of energy and emotion that haven't been let go. As we learn to relax and be still we become more aware of these holding patterns without a lot of words.

For instance, most people don't realize that they change their breathing pattern under tension or stress. Proper breathing is an important part of thinking more creatively and acknowledging one's own ability to take control and be more responsible for self-healing.

Part of this process is to allow people to know the peace of being received exactly as they are and the blessing of being in a space where there is no critical judgement. Reverence as a unique being provides a real starting point for creative change and true healing.

(Davida Sydney is an AMTA Certified Massage Therapist and Certified Neuromuscular Therapist. She also offers Cranial-sacral Therapy, Attunement, and Spiritual Counseling. She has a background in Swedish and Esalen Massage, Sotai, Shiatsu, and Sports Massage; Color, Sound, and Gemstones. Her offices are in Brookline and Brighton, and in Cohasset on Tuesdays at Chiropractic and Family Wellness Care, 87 Sohier St. Please call: 277-8906.)

Selectmen opt for $35,000 pond repair meeting warrant article.

From the $25,000 original donation, selectmen have already appropriated $3,500 for landscaping the front of the town hall.

Selectmen were interested in using the money for a project that would benefit the entire town, Andrew explained. "Warner Brothers said they'd like the money used for the Common, in some way. We thought it would be an appropriate use, because that's the reason they selected Cohasset in the first place. I think they wanted us to use the money to perpetuate and maintain Cohasset Common."

The proposal to bury the utility wires, he added, "was a very valid proposal, but it's also a very big project. That idea is very expensive. We'd need about five times the Warner Brothers money to complete that project, and with the capital expenditures we have coming up, we just can't afford it."

Stevenson worried that with more utilities hooking up to the overhead wire system, the Common trees will have to struggle to survive.

"We're a much more electric society now and it's getting more more ugly over there,' she stated.

Stevenson suggested the idea to selectmen and to members of the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission. Joyce Sturdy, a member of that committee, said they discussed the idea and the consensus was in favor of the proposal. But because a majority of members was not in attendance, the district commission did not officially vote on that matter last month.

"I know a lot of people want this done," Stevenson said. "And I think the town has got to bite the bullet and begin to think about this. Hopefully, there could be state grants to help out with this project, but they haven't been gone after.

"I really feel strongly about this," she added. "People come to this town to see it's beauty and these lovely trees, and they may be cut down. I think this is an idea whose time has come. I hope the money from Warner Brothers will be put to something big and significant and not whittled away on something little."

Executive Secertary Andrew said selectmen received project proposals from several individuals and organizations, including the Community Center, the PSO, and for the Milliken Field repairs.

Selectmen have not decided how the remaining $4,500 from the Warner Brothers donation will be spent.

Native American Anita Nelson talked to Mrs. Montuori's 3rd grade class Tuesday morning. Attentive students include: (front to back) Kevin Gentile, Greg Stevens, Andrea Mercurio, Michael Kasameyer and Grace Deveney. (John Magadieu)

Visit from native American

The Parent School Organization (P.S.O.) is a non-profit organization comprised of all the parents of Cohasset students. One of its functions is to provide enrichment activities for all students. These activities include guest speakers and performers that enhance the school curriculum.

It is by various fundraising activities that the P.S.O. was able to bring native American Anita Nelson from Plimoth Plantation to the third grade students at The Joseph Osgood School this week.

Improvement council formed

The Joseph Osgood School has organized a School Improvement Council, which has the responsibility to determine the use of funds available to the school throughout the Educational Reform Act of July 23, 1985.

The Council consists of the principal, Jack Creamer; three teachers, Maureen Alcott, Faith Bowker and Delia DiBenedetto; three Parent School Organizations (PSO) members, Karen Devine, Sue McNamara and Kathy Walsh; and a community representative who is not a parent of a child attending the school, Mary Varisco.

School Improvement Fund Grants available to the Osgood School for 1986-87, based on $10 per pupil, are $3200. According to the law, the proceeds of the fund grants shall be used, at the school building level, to establish innovative academic programs, expanded services to students, purchase of instructional equipment, alternative educational programs, community or parental involvement programs, cultural education programs, business and education partnership programs or staff training.

All meetings of the School Improvement Council are open to the public. The council members welcome parental and community input. The next meeting at the Osgood School is scheduled for Tuesday, February 10 at 3 p.m. Please contact individual members or the school office for information or suggestions.

Chiropractor suggests shoveling snow the safe way

By Dr. Susan Emmer
Chiropractor
Special to the Mariner

Health & Fitness

It seems we barely had time to finish raking and bagging the autumn leaves before it was time to dig out the snow shovels and that beautiful, white stuff.

It can be tempting to get out and get some fresh air and exercise at the same time you clear driveway and walks, but wait! Be cautious.

It's easy to overdo your physical self with your mental self. All too often many people tend to think (or want to believe) they are in the good shape they were in five, ten or fifteen years ago. But how long has it been since you shoveled snow one, two or more hours?

Follow these tips and protect your heart and your back:

Shovel smart. Do not over-extend yourself. Keep your hand close to the base of the shovel.

If you're not used to physical exercise, warm up before you start with some simple and easy stretches. Stretching the hamstrings, squatting positions and other simple exercises can make a big difference in reducing muscle tension and making your work easier.

Bend your knees as much as possible and use your legs as leverage, not your back.

Take half the amount of snow you might pick up on the shovel. It might take longer, but it's worth it, especially if you're out of shape.

Do not try to throw the snow some distance. Walk it to where you are piling the snow. Better yet, slide, push or pull it if you can.

When piling the snow, do not twist your low back with sudden movements.

Shovel 15 minutes and rest 15 minutes if you need to, particularly in bitter cold weather. True, this will not get the snow cleared quickly, but it will surely save your back and possibly a heart attack. Hypothermia (reduced body heat) can be a real problem, especially in the elderly and very young, so take small doses of the winter cold and dress warmly.

Lastly, pay attention to what you're doing and how your body is feeling. Many needless injuries happen when we let our minds wander and don't stay in the present moment. Present time consciousness is good advice regardless of what we're doing.

If you have chronic back or heart problems, consider the possibility of having someone else take care of the snow for you.

Should you feel chest pains or back pain, stop immediately and call either your medical physician for your heart or your doctor of chiropractic for your back. Chiropractors are experts in determining the cause of back pain and assisting the spine to heal in a properly aligned manner to promote good health.

Balancing the body structurally leads to improved function and better health. A preventive, natural health care approach makes sense if we are to live life to the fullest and work with ease, and that includes shoveling snow!

Creative sketches about admirable people

(The following stories were written by the sixth graders for the annual Creative Writing Contest. The assignment this week was to write a personality sketch about someone the student knows well. Ed.)

There is a person which I very much admire, with his blondish clump of hair and his sincere hazel eyes and his long slim body. His name is John Doherty.

This hard-working man runs Brigg's Stables in Hanover, Massachusetts. When he is not exercising one of the many horses at Brigg's Stables he gives riding lessons at the barn (one of the lessons I partake in.) John is so very kind, understanding, patient, and has such superb horseback riding knowledge. These four elements make John the great riding lesson instructor that he is.

As a child, John was a "sea scout" when growing up in California. Being a sea scout gave him the ambition to start a local group called "The Explorer Scouts." This group meets and the group of people (usually teenagers) go and explore the many acres of land at Brigg's Stables, while on horseback.

John likes to enjoy life and he likes to just make do with the items that he has. He has been in many riding competition shows and as a result, he has won many ribbons and trophies because he is such an outstanding horseback rider.

John is indeed a wonderful person and he is surely a true equestrian.

Bettina, my cousin, a pretty girl of 15 lives on the border of Germany and France. She has black hair, violet eyes, and a very pale complexion.

When I visit her she plays many games with me. Her favorite is Checkers and I know why. Every time we play, she wins. When we play her shiny, black hair falls over her face, which makes her look even more pretty than she already is.

She is kind, caring and she loves animals. Bettina's family owns a barn across the street from their house. We play there every day with the horses, cows, goats, pigs, chickens and all the other animals there. Her favorite animal is a small black and white pig named Sophie, that lives in her room.

Since she loves animals so much, she wants to be a farm veterinarian some day. She already knows everything about delivering baby cows, horses, goats, cats and dogs. In one of her letters she wrote to me she told how she found a bird who had a broken wing. She put a cast on it and kept it in her room until is was well. Isn't she nice?

Some of the best times and worst times in my life have happened with my sister. Although we may fight from time to time (well maybe a little more, maybe a lot more) she's still good old Sis.

I remember one time I wouldn't give back her new jacket that I borrowed. She almost broke my door down, and flushed my favorite stuffed animal down the toilet! I love her, but I hate her.

Her short brown hair, thin face, and blue eyes make it seem like we're not even related. But we sure are!

We're alike in many ways. We both like to read, but she likes to read a lot more than I do. In fact, she spends all of her spare time on her bed reading! She even works at a library! Probably the only reason she works there is so she can get money. She thinks money is everything, just so she can go shopping. She thinks that's what the world was made for, to shop.

She's constantly on the phone. It's probably her favorite thing to do besides writing stories and poems, and going shopping.

All she ever talks about is how she's going to kill her orthodontist. She thinks he is never going to take her braces off. After all, she's had them for about four years!

I like to play games with her, well, I like to play when I win, of course.

But that's hardly ever. She always wins. The only game I can play with her is Scrabble. She stinks at it!

If I had an idol it would be her. I like the way she writes stories and poems, but I don't always understand her poetry. But she'd win any contest for sure. She has a good sense of humor and she's very funny, and kind, but sometimes mean, but I guess all older sisters are like that.

If you don't know her, you have to meet her. You'll love her. She's really awesome!

Erin O'Connor is my cousin who lives in Lexington, Massachusetts. She is very friendly and kind to everyone, (except her brothers), and Erin is always in good humor.

Erin loves Irish step dancing! Her other hobbies are skiing and collecting teddy bears.

Erin doesn't know what she wants to be when she grows up, but she loves babies and little children, so maybe she will be a pre-school teacher.

Erin is nice looking. She has dark hair and blue eyes. I think Erin is tall for her age, but when I saw all of her friends at her party, she was the second shortest!

Erin hates to see people getting picked on, so usually she stands up for other people.

I think you would like Erin for her nice manners, good humor, and kind ways.

My mother is very kind towards people. She talks sweetly to them not harshful. My mother has a strong love for her family. She always makes her family come first no matter what.

Her hobbies are Scrabble and reading. She plays Scrabble almost every Sunday. She reads to us practically every night.

She believes in discipline and freedom.

My mother goes to work every day, except weekends. She is a nutritionist, she counsels pregnant women on how they should eat and new mothers how to feed their baby. My mother loves her job very much.

My mother in the future would like to be a director of a Health Service. She is now in school pursuing a degree in administration. Her wish is that the whole world will be in peace.

My grandfather has a bit of gray-white hair just above the neck. He has a chubby face and a pot belly. His eyes are blue and he has a big nose. When he smiles it's the biggest grin you've ever seen. His smile lights up the whole house.

Grandpa takes catnaps all day. When he isn't napping he is either smoking his pipe, sitting in his chair watching T.V., or eating.

Since Grandpa doesn't drive Grandma does.

His favorite games are chess and cribbage. I don't think Grandma plays chess with him but I know they play cribbage together.

I love my Grandpa. I hope I can always be as friendly and cheerful as him. He will always be in my heart.

It took me quite a while to find a character who seemed to be a good person to write about. When I finally did, though, this person was great to describe.

Watching and socializing with this person I have found that this youngster seems to succeed in all things, (whether he likes them or not) such as: soccer, baseball, schoolwork, and making friends by "just being a good kid." Saying, "just being a good kid" means that I have found that this slim, tall, blue eyed pupil has a way of staying out of arguments and going along with what others do or say, while at the same time standing up for his own beliefs.

A quiet mild-tempered person, this student will grow up to be a great person in just about all aspects.

This generous, coordinated student proves to be a good example for others by persisting and striving to be the best he can be, correcting his mistakes and completing tasks set before him.

This appealing individual with his light skin and light-brown hair will probably be a great success in life.

My father is a very keen sailor who skippers his boat with a skillful hand and a funny accent. There are many more like him where he comes from ... New Zealand.

Every Saturday in the summer whether it be rain, fog or shine he goes racing with his partner in their Flying Scott.

On rainy and foggy days he wears bright yellow foul weather gear and looks like a fisherman just going to sea. On sunny days he wears a green and blue rugby shirt covered by a midnight blue sweater and green and blue shorts and his golden brown hair flies with the wind.

My father flies an uncommon looking flag with the Union Jack in one corner (of course everyone knows that's the British flag) and the stars of the Southern Cross in the other corner (which can only be seen in the Southern Hemisphere).

His dream is to sail for New Zealand in the America's Cup. He's gotten a good start by winning the Captain's Cup at the Sailing Club. Who knows ... maybe he's caught some of that Kiwi Magic.

There's a special love I have for a kind, white haired lady, my Grandmother.

I call her Nonnie, which is a name that had been passed on by ancestors.

My Grandmother's husband died two years after their third child was born, so I never got to meet my grandfather.

Nonnie has long white hair which she pins up on her head. When she goes to parties she always wears a flower in her hair.

Most people say my Grandmother has a heart of gold, which means that she would do anything for anybody, and is always doing nice things for people. For example, she reads to the blind.

A good thing about my Grandmother is that she cares about so many people, and you will always know it.

She seems to always be happy, and that makes everybody else happy.

Nonnie always has time to play, she never tells me she is too busy. When we are together we play cards, take walks, and bake things.

My Grandmother is very, very, very horrified of snakes. From some of the experiences she's had I don't blame her. One time she found a 5 foot Bahamian Boa living in the car!

She lives in Marshfield, for every season but winter, then she lives in the Bahamas. Good thing because we would hear a lot of complaining about the cold weather!

I think my Grandmother is GREAT!

My Grandfather was admired by a lot of people (including me). In his life-time he was always a very happy man. Whenever I went up to his house to spend a night or two he would always be smiling and having a good time. He was a smart man too. He loved to read and he was full of old sayings that he repeated over and over to me and now that I think of it, they have given me a lot of good advice.

He always was nice toward other people and he really believed in manners.

His ambitions were to lead a good life and to have a good time. Also, he had high hopes for all of his family to succeed in life.

One of his hobbies was going canoeing.

My Grandfather's philosophy of life was probably just to, "live and let live." He also wanted people to enjoy life and try to get the most out of it. If someone was having troubles or if they were worried and not getting any satisifaction out of life, my Grandfather would become very upset.

My Grandfather was 5'-10" (five feet and ten inches tall) and he weighed around 160 pounds (one hundred sixty lbs.) He had a little bald spot on top of his head (located in the center of his head) with a little bit of white hair encircling it. He had very fine blue eyes and a round nose. Most of the time he had rosy cheeks and his smile traveled from ear to ear. Yes, my Grandfather was a very admired man.

Yes, if you've ever lost a pet due to someone else's negligence, there could be millions of dollars waiting for you in our nation's court system.

At the Law Offices of Paul Steven Stone, we specialize in personal pet injuries. And though no one can ever console you for the accidental loss of a beloved pet, we can help alleviate the suffering by making you comfortable for the rest of your life.

Mr. and Mrs. Elwin Barxley collected over $2½ million when a neighbor's trash proved deadly poisonous to Trixie, their much cherished Great Dane.

Irwin Bottleworth purchased a motel chain in the Southwest with the proceeds of his claim against the manufacturers of the lawn mower that seriously altered the physical composition of his beloved garden snake, Rambo.

And Millie Tronkeil, "Lucky Millie" to her friends, has parlayed three deaths of pets in unrelated accidents into one of the largest fortunes in North America.

So why sit around staring forlornly at an empty birdcage or half-finished box of doggy biscuits? At the Law Offices of Paul Steven Stone, we'll not only show you how to get even, but how to get rich.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'Out on a Limb' with Shirley MacLaine

Last week I watched the last part of Shirley MacLaine's television movie "Out on a Limb," almost in spite of myself.

Though for years I had been attracted to her as an actress, I intentionally avoided her books. I had been told they were accounts of her spiritual searching, including experiences with ESP, reincarnation, even visitors from outer space.

It's hard for me to say exactly why I avoided her easily available messages. I had had some similar experiences, and great interest in the subjects.

Perhaps my interest was so great, I was uncertain about their being undertaken in a mass media, show-biz way.

The great American marketplace tends to trivialize, and focus merely on what sells as a fad, rather than what might actually have merit.

I wasn't enthusiastic about concepts like out-of-body experiences or reincarnation becoming the next fad.

Then again, movies like "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and even "E.T." gave UFO's a kind of legitimacy which led to greater openmindedness and perhaps even greater concern about the ethics of space exploration. Maybe this movie could do the same for other aspects of New Age thinking.

However, the movie was embarrassing. The script, co-written by MacLaine, was simplistic and pretentious. It is difficult to speak of spiritual matters without spouting cliches or sounding ridiculous.

Religious leaders tend to rely on repeating the great words of history's spiritual teachers. Seldom does one hear original teaching that illuminates.

Besides, how many movies about "The Bible," for instance, have worked? Jesus is usually portrayed as a wimp and the great spiritual events of his life are reduced to special effects.

Special effects were also used in "Out on a Limb." The auras shown around people looked like something out of "Batman" from the 1960's. The out-of-body experience reminded me of Peter Pan.

The next day MacLaine was on the Oprah Winfrey show dispensing information and answering questions with emotions and facility.

I suppose if her efforts lead more people to trust their intuition and be true to their spiritual paths, and less distracted by everyday concerns of the material world, she will have accomplished something.

I couldn't help feeling she was a novice, claiming more "truth" than she really knew. I wonder if she isn't in over her depth, if she isn't playing the sorcerer's apprentice.

Any minister, regardless of faith, will agree that the belief system, the relationship of faith to works, going on at any given time with another person is enormously complex.

Giving "spiritual advice," or even depicting spiritual events on film, smacks of spiritual arrogance, or at least innocence that threatens at any moment to become ignorance. In the spirit world, as elsewhere, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

One of the dangerous aspects of New Age seeking is how easy it is for one to think of themselves, or another, as an expert. Yet there is no accreditation or screening process, no guarantee that Shirley MacLaine or anybody else is a wise interpreter of unseen worlds.

All the more reason for us to listen to her, or any other claimant to spiritual authority, with a sharp and open mind, and a vigorous skepticism.

Unfortunately, we are no longer, as a people, very capable of critical thinking. We accept far too often, what is put before us.

Perhaps this is because our daily lives demand too many complex but meaningless decisions. As a result, when we are confronted with essential decisions about our lives, we abdicate and look to others for direction and will.

"Out on a Limb" will make its blip on the public consciousness, then pass from our view. It will have made it easier for the next person to speak of their spiritual wonders. What is uncertain is whether that person will be a spiritual master or trickster.

People will continue to be taken in by those professing to have ultimate answers to ultimate questions. And it will continue to be impossible to overestimate the range of people's spiritual realities. There is almost no belief, no matter how improbable, that isn't held by somebody.

While on one level this lack of discrimination threatens to devalue spiritual seeking of all kinds, at the same time society is more open to spiritual possibilities than we might realize.

If the Air Force announced tomorrow unimpeachable evidence of a flying saucer, how many of us would be surprised?

If marine biologists announced that dolphin language had been decoded and the average dolphin I.Q. was 138, how many would feel totally surprised?

Yet these kinds of spectacular events are not the real substance of New Age thinking, any more than changing water into wine was the most important event in the life of Jesus.

The ultimate message has always been far simpler: that we should love one another and be faithful stewards of the earth and its creatures.

If Shirley MacLaine or a UFO pilot or anyone else can help us get the message, I'm all for them.

Photography exhibit entries being accepted

Regional and local photographers are invited to enter the South Shore Art Center's annual All New England Juried Photography Exhibit "Images," which will hang in the Center during February.

Photographers may bring their work to the Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset Friday, Jan. 30 from noon to 4 p.m. and Saturday, Jan. 31 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

All work must be securely framed and ready for hanging and must be identified on back with title, value, photographer name, address and telephone.

Cash awards will be given for best black and white and best color as well as special awards given by the Arts Lottery Councils of Norwell, Weymouth, Braintree and Abington. Ribbons will be awarded in both categories.

Jurying the exhibit are John Laurenson, Anita Douthat and Joan Albert.

The juried photography exhibit will hang in conjunction with a one-person exhibit of work by photographer Steven Nelson. This is Nelson's second exhibit at the South Shore Art Center. A formal opening reception for both exhibits will be held on Sunday, Feb. 8 from 4 to 6 p.m.

Photographers may enter five works in all categories. The entry fee is $6 and photographers are asked to attach a resume to back of their works. Work not accepted may be picked up on Saturday, Feb. 7 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. All other work is to be picked on Thursday, Feb. 26 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

'Tribute' continues through Saturday

At Nickerson Theatre, Bernard Slade's "Tribute" continuing through Saturday, Feb. 7.

This comedy follows the life of Scottie Templeton, a care-free, womanizing prankster unable to take anything seriously, including his own son. Directed by Judy Braha, "Tribute" is the fourth production at Norwell's professional theatre, now in its third season.

Performance times are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m.; Sunday at 7 p.m.; and Saturday and Sunday matinee at 2 p.m.

COMING TO NICKERSON THEATRE "BAREFOOT IN THE PARK"

Neil Simon's "Barefoot in the Park," one of the most successful comedies in American stage history, will be presented at the Nickerson Theatre, opening Friday, Feb. 13, and continuing through Saturday March 21.

It is the fifth production at Norwell's year-round professional theatre, now in its third season.

Written by one of America's most successful playwrights, "Barefoot in the Park" ran for over three years on Broadway.

The comedy hit centers around a pair of newlyweds as they first set up housekeeping in a bleak Greenwich Village apartment.

Complications are provided by the bride's mother — a lady of unshatterable propriety, and an overfriendly, eccentric neighbor from the attic.

Directed by Nora Hussey, who has staged several previous productions at the Nickerson Theatre, the cast will include: Ted McAdams as Paul Bratter; Judith McIntyre as Corie Bratter; Patricia Pellows as Corie's mother, Mrs. Banks; Niels Miller as the neighbor, Victor Velasco and the Delivery Man, and John Davin as the Telephone Repair Man. The set and lighting design will be by Jace Holmes.

Performance times are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m.; Sunday at 7 p.m. and matinees Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m.

AT NICKERSON THEATRE "HEDDA GABLER"

Henrik Ibsen's drama, "Hedda Gabler," will replace the originally scheduled "84 Charing Cross Road" as the sixth production at Norwell's professional theatre this season.

To be directed by Judy Braha, "Hedda Gabler" will open Friday, March 27 and will continue through Saturday, May 2. The cast will be announced shortly.

Written in 1890, "Hedda Gabler" concerns a desperate woman, trapped in a stifling society, who becomes a victim of her own envy and bitterness.

For further information and ticket availability, please call or write the Nickerson Theatre Box Office, P. O. Box 272, 30 Accord Park Drive, Accord (Norwell) 02116, 871-2400.

SSARC public hearing

The South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens (SSARC) is holding its second Public Hearing on Feb. 11, at 7:30 p.m., in the council chambers at Quincy City Hall.

William Delahunt, Norfolk County District Attorney, will again moderate the hearing, which was very well attended last year.

This is an opportunity for self-advocates, family members, and other special needs advocates to present testimony on the needs of older unserved clients — those past the age to be covered by the Chapter 688 Law.

There are many such unserved people, often still living at home with parents over 65 years old, with no guarantee of residential or other services when their parents can no longer care for them.

The need for a variety of family support services not only respite care, but extended day programs, recreation programs, and specialized in-home programs will be addressed.

SSARC will also be seeking recommendations concerning the new Department of Mental Retardation, especially coordination of services, community participation, and citizen input.

The final issue of concern is the generally low salary levels which are causing high staff turnover and recruitment problems.

So. Shore gastronomy hits 'The Times'

When reading the New York Times, the last thing I expect to see is an item about our South Shore and to find one not to mention two, really made my day.

It seems a two-level sky-lighted store with marble floors in New York City opened to the public with a party and hosting it was James L. Bildner.

By now, most of us have enjoyed getting to know our way around their Cohasset store, one of their 14 upscale stores that has been built since their Boston market opened two years ago. The 5,000 square-foot store which opened in the Big Apple may be more elegant than the Cushing Plaza one we enjoy, but the service is the same, with telephone orders, catering and lots of goodies. Joan Bizzozero is from Cohasset, not too far from Bildners, where you can pick the ingredients for her recipe for

VEAL SCALOPPINE

1 1/2 lbs. veal cutlet, sliced thin
2 T each flour and butter
1/2 C. sherry or marsala wine
1/2 lb. mushrooms, sliced
2 green peppers, cut in chunks, 3/4" thick

Cook peppers in a bit of butter and oil in covered frying pan till done. Add mushrooms, cook for just a few minutes and remove from pan. Pound veal to break down fibers. Cut in 2" pieces. Salt, pepper and roll in flour. Brown in butter over fairly high heat about 4 minutes each side. Add wine. Stir until veal is well-coated with wine. Return mushrooms and pepper to pan, reduce heat to slow and cover for a couple of minutes to warm. Serves four.

Yet another success story caught my eye as I read on; this item concerned a young mother from Hingham where she and her family have lived for the past 10 years. From my files I unearthed a letter dated June 1981 from Greer Underwood in which she asked me to review her yet unpublished cookbook. Since then, Globe Pequot has printed not one, but two of her special diet books and the Times article tells of her winning top honors for her book "Gourmet Light" in the annual national competition for cookbook authors.

Greer also lectures and was a guest speaker this month at the food media fair in New York City. Space is limited in this little column, so I'm saving her apple tart recipe from "Gourmet Light" until later. Please call me if you'd like a copy, or, better still, get one of Greer's books to add to your collection.

Alligator is "in" this season, not just as accessories such as shoes and bags costing up to $500, but on your dinner table. This particular article I read suggested calling your gourmet retailer to order some 'gator meat, as Louisiana wholesalers have plenty on hand after selling off the skins.

That's when I thought to call Bare Cove Gourmet in Hingham, for also tucked away in my desk I had their ad offering reptile meats, game, game birds and even Lion Burgers, specialities they order from John Duvor of Boston. It was from Roger, one of the three owners of the little red building across from the Fruit Center, that I learned of the time they attracted customers by stationing a boy dressed as a gator outside, offering samples to all who stopped by. One gutsy gal who was hostessing a cocktail party bought some to serve her guests — I hope they were forewarned as to what they were about to nibble on. Rattlesnake is not a "biggie," but a lot of customers are ordering rabbit and poussin (baby chicken), both popular in Europe.

Just in case you really care, Cajun alligator tastes a little like gamey pork, according to Roger and is rather tough. The recipe I have for Gator Sauce Piquant suggests marinating the meat for an hour before preparing and serving with rice. Here is Arlene Brown's hors d'oeuvres recipe, one you can sit back and enjoy as you eat her

CARAWAY CHEESE LOG

1 pkg. (3 oz.) cream cheese, softened
6 T butter
1 tsp. each capers and paprika
3 1/2 tsp. caraway seeds
1/2 tsp. ea. Accent and anchovy paste
1 T minced onion

Blend cheese and butter. Mix in remaining ingredients (use just 1/2 tsp. caraway) and blend thoroughly. Form into a log 5" long and 1 1/4" in diameter. Refrigerate overnight. When ready to serve, roll log in remaining 3 tsp. of caraway seeds.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Tax time: that Infernal Revenue Service!

"Don't bother repapering the bathroom," the Dragon told me. "We're moving to the Poor Farm next week. Or to jail."

I patted him on the head. "Still the same positive optimist I married," I observed. "How come?"

"Oh, sure," he muttered, "look on the bright side. You're not the one who opens the mail." He waved an envelope at me.

"Obviously you're not, either," I observed. "It's still sealed. So far all we know is that it's from Internal Revenue Service, Andover, MA 05501; it was mailed Jan. 16 and there's a $300 penalty for private use."

"Right!" he agreed. "And if there's a $300 fine for using their lousy envelope, just think what the penalty is for whatever it is they're accusing us of. Falsely."

"Why don't you look inside and find out?" I asked.

"Because I can't bear it. For the 33 years of our marriage we've worked, saved and skimped to acquire a modest home, a few meager belongings and a minimal bank account. And now it's all going to go down the tubes because some miserable IRS computer is lying about us. I'm too old to start over again."

I sighed. "This is another one of your $100 jacks, isn't it?

"Remember the time you got a flat tire in a new car and found out there was no jack in the trunk? You were o.k. at first. You figured you'd just walk to the next service station and buy a jack.

"After two miles you were saying things like, 'I wonder how much a jack costs? $10? Maybe even $15? Well, whatever it is, I'll just have to pay it.'

"After five miles you were convinced that the service station guy would take advantage of your desperate need and up the price. You checked your wallet and decided he'd probably charge you the $55 you had, and you wouldn't have any money left for gas.

"After eight miles it was getting dark and you just knew all the service stations were closing. You were sure the tab would be $75 or $80.

"When you finally found a service station it was closed, but you could see there was an apartment over it. So you pounded on the door till the owner opened a window and asked it there was anything he could do to help you.

" 'Yeah,' you yelled. 'You can take your $100 jack and shove it in the dumpster.' "

The Dragon shrugged. "So I was a little negative. Once."

I looked at him in disbelief. "Once? How have you been negative? Let me count the ways."

He shook his head. "Don't bother. You'll have to admit I was right to be concerned the last time we got a letter from the IRS."

"Not really, They just told us there was a discrepency between the income we reported and our W-2 forms. That was because the company I work for sent a form saying they'd paid me $7,000 more than they actually did. I felt the easiest way to resolve the problem would be for them to give me $7,000. I would have been happy to pay the tax on it. But they wouldn't go for it, so we just had our accountant straighten it out. No big deal."

He glared at me. "Whaddaya mean no big deal? It took me three days to get up the nerve to open that envelope. What about my mental anguish?"

I took the envelope from his hand. "Oh, for heaven's sake. Let's see what's in here. Just as I thought. It's about that $7,000, and it says, 'Dear Taxpayer: Thank you for furnishing more information to explain the income we recently wrote you about. We are pleased to tell you that your explanation enabled us to clear up the discrepancy. No further action on your part is required. Thank you for your cooperation.' Now, was that so terrible?"

He nodded. "Terrible isn't even the word for it. Try sheer horror. I can't think of anything in the world worse than receiving that letter."

"Except," he added thoughtfully, "not receiving that letter. Taxation without representation may be tyranny, but taxation with representation has its hairy moments, too."

The South Shore's College of Opportunity

The view from every residence at James Landing is breathtaking. The same as it was in 1690 when Captain Benjamin James first saw it. So undeniably beautiful we invite you to . . .

Sea For Yourself.

To reside at James Landing is to know just how private and serene seaside estate living can be. Nature's scenic generosity overwhelms . . . turning landscapes to seascapes to dreamscapes.

The Architecture

Inspired by the forms and textures of the Irish countryside, the sloping roofs and massive chimneys unify the whole. The respect for the land and the sea is beautifully apparent.

Within, the amenities surround and abound. Spacious homes, limited to fifty, entice with imaginative layouts particular to your pleasure.

The Marina At James Landing

Residents are assured private boat slips at James Landing's full-service marina. Reason enough to forget landlocked pressures of business and sail away — if only for a day — on a sea of contentment.

Go To Sea For Yourself In A Boston Whaler. With Our Compliments

The residences are nearing completion and we're marking the opening of our Sales Center with a very special gift for discerning buyers. From January 17 through March 15, 1987, those who purchase a James Landing residence will receive, with our compliments, a 15' Boston Whaler — ready to cast off from your private boat slip.

Quality. From Concept To Completion

James Landing was developed by the award-winning Parencorp of Brookline; designed by the nationally-recognized architectural firm of Huygens and DiMella; and built by Wiley Construction, the South Shore's premier custom home builder.

Priced from the high $200,000's. Visit our Sales Center (open daily from 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.) or call 545-7335 for an appointment and . . . sea for yourself.

Take Rt. 3A to Scituate. At the intersection of 3A and Rt. 123, make a left on The Driftway and go ½ mile to James Landing on the right.

or

Remembering the tough times with hope

By Mary Mahoney
Mariner Staff

Four years ago, Sally Reed's son was in trouble —at home, at school, with the police and with himself. It was a despairing, frightening time for mother and son. Now, 18-year-old Sean Reed is a freshman student at Assumption College, majoring in business management and as he looks back on those troubled years he remembers the tough times with hope for a better future.

"I'm glad I took charge of my life because I wasn't going anywhere before."

"I don't think my son would be alive today if I hadn't received the strength to take action to save his life," added his mother, who turned to the Toughlove group in Hanover in 1983 for help. "This is the closest thing to a miracle I will ever see in my lifetime."

Sally Reed told her success story during a Toughlove open house held at St. Mary's Parish Center in Hanover last Saturday, to highlight the support of the parents' group which advocates positive change through responsible behavior.

When Reed, a single parent, was faced with the responsibility of raising Sean and daughter Tiffany, she said she always tried to compensate for the fact that they didn't have a father.

"I just didn't want to be too hard on them," she said, acknowledging that when she joined the Toughlove program she was soon confronted by a loving member of the group who told her the behavior of her son was intolerable.

"The first night I went to a Toughlove meeting I was embarrassed to think I was the only one who had a kid with a problem. The second time I went to a meeting I just sat there in denial. I wanted a quick fix to make everything better," Reed admitted. "But I kept coming and now I feel Toughlove worked for me because I worked the program; I followed the suggestions even though it was hard to follow through and be consistent."

Because it worked for Sally, the program also worked for Sean.

"If my mother was not in Toughlove I would not have been forced to take responsibility for my own actions and I probably wouldn't have graduated from high school," Sean said, recalling the effects of alcohol and drugs on his behavior and his relationships.

"I was just an angry kid growing up, probably because my father left."

During his junior year at Hingham High School, Sean signed into a residential school for troubled teen-agers in Littleton. At first, he admits, it was simply to have a place to live.

"But as time went on, I realized who I was and I began caring about that and started learning to deal with my emotions."

While attending the residential facility, Sean worked hard on his schooling and gave up drinking and drugs. And he was able to graduate with his class at Hingham High School last June.

Although parents do come to Toughlove to learn to deal with teens hooked on drugs and alcohol, Bruce Burkholder, national trainer for Toughlove, explained during the open house last Saturday, that the program is for parents struggling with any teenage behavior problem.

"It's not just for parents of kids doing drugs," he said. "This is a self-help group for parents, kids and the community. We see Toughlove as a community solution."

Toughlove was developed by family counselors, David and Phyllis York in the late 1970s when their own teenage daughter became involved with drugs and alcohol.

In 1981, the first group south of Quincy was formed in Hanover by Betty Joy, now a Toughlove representative.

Although Joy admits she and her husband had struggled through a family crisis with one of their own children, by the time the local program was established, "the crisis had passed. We practiced our own type of tough love."

The Hanover group, she said, began after she took a woman to the Quincy group.

"I saw how the program worked and I decided Hanover could use something like that here."

Joy gathered a few people together for the very first meeting and now close to 50 parents meet every Monday at 7:30 p.m. at St. Mary's lower church. And from the Hanover group six others have developed; in Randolph, Scituate, Brockton, Middleboro, South Boston and Roslindale.

The program last Saturday, Joy explained, was offered for parents and professionals who work with troubled kids to "dispel the myth that Toughlove is a group that encourages parents to throw kids away."

"We have many support systems. That's what Toughlove is all about," said Joy.

For one woman in Hanover, the group gave her the strength to take a stand against her own teenaged daughter and to set what Toughlove calls "bottom lines" which are goals parents develop to set limits on unacceptable behavior.

"I always believed my daughter was a victim of peer pressure. I blamed everyone (especially myself) and everything for her behavior but I never blamed her. I always said she was a good kid," said the woman who has been a member of Toughlove since August.

"What brought me to Toughlove was when I found out one of my children was drinking. When she started verbally abusing me I became afraid of her but since I came to the program I am no longer afraid and I can't be manipulated anymore."

Although the program is based on the support parents give one another, Burkholder said the success of Toughlove can also be traced to the networking with other agencies.

"We try to acknowledge the people in the community who have put themselves out for Toughlove."

To recognize that assistance, community service awards were presented last Saturday to people who have helped the program, the parents and their children in crisis.

Those honored with awards were: Robert Zedik, Rev. Henry Doherty, Pastor of St. Mary's Church; state Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray, Lora Ettridge, Hanover police Lt. Paul Hayes, Ralph Pelland, Paul DuCott, the Plymouth Juvenile Probation Department, Judge Geraldine Lombardo, Grace Madden and John Murphy.

The most valuable person award was also presented to Betty Joy's husband, John "Buzz" Joy of Spruce Way in Hanover for his support of the program and for "his time and energy in helping our group by printing literature and his generous support of funding parent training workshops throughout the past six years; for taking kids into your home when they needed a place to stay and for being understanding and supportive of your wife Betty especially when it seemed like the phone would never stop ringing."

Reviewing the success of the open house, Betty Joy commented, "I'm excited because through the last five years we've seen so many people who were broken and are now working toward wonderful, loving lives. That's what keeps me involved. I love being a part of it."

Sewer hearing open to public

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Manuel Salvador, the town's suspended sewer treatment plant operator, will request that his disciplinary hearing be open to the public.

"We will request that the town's business be conducted in the open," he attorney stated. Frank McGee of Marshfield who will represent Salvador in the personnel matter, added, "that's the way it should be."

The hearing was originally scheduled for January 27 but was indefinitely postponed after Salvador suffered a heart attack a few days earlier. Although he is home recovering, Atty. McGee said no date has been set for the hearing before the town's sewer commissioners.

Salvador was suspended by the commission members Dec. 29 for refusing to help staff the plant while he was on vacation. In a letter sent to the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), the commission explained that when an operator who was working in place of the vacationing Salvador walked off the job, Salvador was asked to help staff the plant. He refused to interrupt his vacation, they explained in the letter, and was subsequently suspended.

Dec. 29, commissioners hired York Water Consultants to temporarily man the plant. According to state regulation, a certified operator must be at the helm · during the hours of operation. The commissioners voted in January to hire YWC on a fulltime basis until July. They have signed a contract with the private contracting firm.

In the meantime, Salvador is on suspension with pay, pending the outcome of the disciplinary hearing.

According to the commissioners, they have been dissastisfied with Salvador's work performance for several months. In the minutes of the commission's September 9 meeting, it was noted that they reviewed Salvador's monthly plant report for August. "Commissioner Vanderweil noted four high days: Aug. 5, 14, 21 and 25, 1986 and high C1 readings; and he requested Mr. Salvador submit a written report. Chairman DeSantis concurred. . . Mr. Ross reported malfunction at 11 a.m. on Aug. 11, 1986. Mr. Salvador was out that day. Chairman DeSantis stated he will discuss the test results with Mr. Salvador."

It's an early call on snow days

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

When flakes of frozen water vapor fall from the skies on winter weekday mornings, it is decision tim. for Stephen Hart.

As the superintendent of Cohasset schools, Hart must decide whether to close schools for the day, delay school openings or proceed with caution.

The decision he makes on those snowy morns affects hundreds of students, their families and everyone who works in the Cohasset school system.

"It's not always an easy decision to make," he said. The degree of difficulty depends on the timing of the storm.

"If I know it's going to snow," he explained, "I get up at 4 a.m. and check the status of the storm. The last storm we had started at 5 a.m."

Hart said he tries to call off school by 6 a.m., because Metco students and much of the staff must travel from afar, leaving their homes as early as 6:30 a.m. to reach Cohasset in time for the beginning of the school day.

"I have to look out for the safety of the students and staff," he said. "It's not an easy decision to make, and it can't be done lightly."

Hart described the procedure he follows when deciding whether or not to close the schools.

"When I get up, I call the highway department to find out about the condition of the roads," he said. "I also call the police department to check the reports

Resident decries bureaucratic inaction

A Fair Oaks Lane resident can't comprehend why state officials move so slowly.

All Michael Sullivan wants to know is what the horrible smell is that emanates from the area of the commercial landfill off Rte. 3A. Although he's been complaining for more than four months, phoning local officials every night, talking with state officials each day, he hasn't received an answer.

"What's it going to take?" he asked State Senator William Golden Monday night. Sen. Golden invited town officials to meet with him this week on an informal, informational basis.

"This is wrong. And if it comes out that something is lethal, it's going to be real wrong," Sullivan added.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik, who has attempted to involve the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) in the matter, said the state conducted tests around the landfill Monday morning. Fire Chief Daniel Brock also noted that a four-hour air quality test was to be conducted by the fire department Tuesday.

"This is a very high stakes game," Sen. Golden answered, noting his involvement in the town's foray against the commercial landfill. "I fought (to require) for that Class One discharge permit (by Cohasset Heights Ltd.). And if the town feels there will be no agreement for this landfill to operate safely, I will back you to the extent I can, whatever decision the town comes to."

Sullivan's complaint, which has been supported by many other residents and town officials, is a pungent, rotten-egg smell that appears to develop along Rte. 3A near the commercial landfill off Crocker Lane. Everyone agreed the smell is devastating and reappears almost daily. The strongest odors, Sullivan said, are during the early morning hours and between 6:30 and 9:30 each night.

Selectman James Gallagher, who was the first to mention the problem to Sen. Golden Monday night, said the odor has occurred in that neighborhood for longer than four months.

Sen. Golden recalled a similar situation in

New members

Selectmen voted Monday night to make two appointments to the Cultural Exchange Committee. The new members include Eloise Wells and Barbara Hislop.

Selectman Diane Sullivan also noted that appointments were made this week to the personnel committee. The new members include John Brady of Brewster Road, Joan Brown and William Good of Fairoaks Lane.

Dog officer opening

There is an immediate opening for an interim dog officer, selectmen announced this week.

Following the resignation last week of dog officer Richard Yokum, selectmen said area towns will be providing mutual aid assistance to Cohasset on an emergency basis.

But until a permanent replacement is found, selectmen are seeking an interim dog officer. Selectmen said they encourage retired residents to apply for the position to the selectmen's office.

More candidates

Some races are heating up, and some races seem to be cooling down as candidates file nomination papers for the April 11 town election.

Robert Beggan of Sankey Road has resigned his position on the recreation commission to try for a three-year position on the board of selectmen. His resignation results in a vacancy on the commission. There are three years left on the unexpired commission seat.

Burtram Pratt of Ripley Road has also taken nomination papers for a three-year seat on the board of selectmen. Pratt is currently a member of the Board of Registrars.

There are two, three-year seats vacant on the board of selectmen. Lillian Murray and Martha Gjesteby have also taken nomination papers for the position of selectmen.

No one has filed nomination papers for a three-year term on the board of health, a five-year term on the planning board, a five-year term on the housing authority, and two, three-year terms on the library board of trustees.

Donald Staszko of Beach Street has taken papers for a five-year seat on the recreation commission. With the resignation of commissioner Beggan, that leaves three vacant seats on the board. Incumbent Peter Laugelle has said he will not be a candidate for a second term. Incumbents Mary K. Muncey and Terese England Duggan have taken out nomination papers for the commission.

Water commission incumbent William Monutori has taken out nomination papers for a three-year term. That is the only opening on the commission.

Sewer commission incumbent Edward Guild of 365 Jerusalem Road will be a candidate for re-election to the three-year term. Lot W. Bates of Red Gate Lane will also be a candidate for that seat.

Other incumbents who will be running for re-election are: Assessor Warren Pratt; Town Meeting Moderator William Weeks; Town Clerk Frances Marks; Treasurer-Collector Elizabeth Ripley; Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield; and Library Trustee Sheila Evans.

Peter Sturtevant of Ripley Road has withdrawn his candidacy for a three-year term on the library trustees Nomination papers for the election are available at the town clerk's office until 5 p.m. Feb. 25 and must be returned with the signatures of 50 voters by Feb. 27 at 5 p.m.

Roadrace schedule

Selectmen approved the use of town hall on Saturday, April 4 and Sunday, April 5 for the Cohasset Rotary annual Race by the Sea.

This will be the 11th year of the popular 10K roadrace which now includes a recreational 10K walk.

Race organizer Peter Logue said the Rotary will not use town hall toilet facilities after last year's crowd overused the bathrooms there. Instead, they will rent several portable toilets which will be installed at the rear of the town hall parking lot. There will be no liquor served at the race, selectmen specified, which was the same provision made last year. The hours of the registration and race will be from 9 a.m. to 12 p.m. April 4 and from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. April 5.

Litchfield heads March of Dimes

Private William Litchfield of the Cohasset Fire Department has been appointed chairman of the Cohasset March of Dimes Coin Canister Drive for 1987. The appeal, which is conducted annually during the month of January, is one of the March of Dimes' oldest fundraising efforts.

"The March of Dimes is an important part of every community," said Litchfield. "Their efforts to prevent birth defects is a cause that effects all of us."

Over thirty cities and town in eastern Massachusetts are participating in the coin canister campaign. The Massachusetts Bay Chapter hopes to surpass last year's total of almost $7,000.

Bloodmobile report

One hundred and eight patient donors participated in the Cohasset Bloodmobile held last Tuesday at the First Parish House.

Groups that again participated in the Bloodmobile were Seavey Engineering; Norfolk Conveyor; St. Anthony's; St. Stephen's; Second Congregational; Unitarian First Parish; Rotary; Masons; Legion; Teachers and independents. There were many new donors and two new groups, Glastonbury and Baptists; as well as five personal donations.

Corinne Cahill, R.N. directed the days operation. Other volunteer directors included Barbara Dillon and Vi Tuthill, Canteen; Jeff Steele and Grace Joyce, Receptionists; Typist's Secretary, Edie Quigley; Escorts and Temperatures, High School students, and Girl Scout Baby Sitters.

Special recognition is given to Edie Quigley who is retiring after serving as Secretary for many years. Mary Davis will be the new volunteer Secretary.

Chairman Al Odermatt thanked all those who promoted the Bloodmobile through the various publicity media, and those who signed up donors for the various groups. A special thanks is given to Pam Earle for her canvassing of all members of St. Stephen's Parish and to Carol Riley who volunteered to be St. Anthony's Donor Promoter in addition to School Teachers.

Town needs full-time dog officer

Former dog officer Richard Yokum says the only way to enforce the town's leash law is to spend $50,000. That would be enough money to develop an effective animal control office as opposed to what he called "this slipshod operation."

In a closed meeting with selectmen last week, Yokum said they would need $50,000 "to do a good job." That money would be used to hire a fulltime officer, provide office space in town hall and a telephone service.

Selectmen last week requested Yokum's resignation after they repeatedly asked for written monthly reports and failed to receive them.

After a heated discussion with Yokum, selectmen asked him twice to submit his resignation. The part-time dog officer resigned at the meeting, saying he would not accept another telephone call on any matter relating to that department.

In the meantime, dog officers from neighboring towns will be assisting on an emergency basis in Cohasset.

Yokum said this week he had thought about resigning in July after selectmen issued the requirement regarding the monthly reports. He had requested a warrant under Chapter 140 of the General Laws which allows a dog officer to walk onto private property to retrieve an leashed animal. Selectmen did not issue the warrant, according to Executive Secretary Donald Andrew, because there is no shelter or kennel to house the stray animals. Selectmen advised Yokum to obtain restraining orders against the owners of animals who repeatedly allow their dogs to roam the town unleashed.

For the past two years, there has been no commercial kennel where the local dog officer can bring stray animals on a regular basis. Plans are being developed in Hingham to construct a regional animal shelter. Cohasset will be asked to participate in the project.

The part-time position pays $3,000, for a job Yokum described as "one big headache." He has been dog officer for the past five years. "It's a real hardship on my family," the Scituate resident said. "It doesn't matter if you get a call about a barking dog at 2 a.m., you have to go out and investigate."

Yokum described the town's dog officer department as "slipshod." His operating budget is the same as when the department was developed in 1977. He uses a town-owned van for traveling in his capacity as dog officer and for use in transporting animals. Yokum is also a patrolman on the Cohasset Police Department. That position is not affected by last week's resignation.

Yokum said the town will be forced into accepting the regional shelter project because it is the only available alternative. "It's going to be expensive, about $1 per capita on the tax rate. But it's the cheapest way out for Cohasset," he said. "I also think the town ought to seriously consider changing the bylaw which is very vague now. And I have said for a long time that dog license fees should be increased."

Fines for retrieving impounded animals should also be increased, he suggested. Hingham currently has a scaled fee system for repeated offenses. The third time an animal is impounded, the owner is charged $25 plus a $10 transportation cost.

"This is a bad situation," Yokum said this week. "We don't have a kennel and until this town hires a fulltime dog officer, it's not going to get better."

According to the minutes of the executive session meeting held Jan. 26, selectmen asked Yokum why he had not complied with their request for the monthly written reports. He answered that he had not gotten to it, that they were completed but not typewritten. It was then that selectmen "asked Mr. Yokum is there was any reason he should not submit his resignation at this time."

Although he later gave selectmen his verbal resignation, Yokum first said there was no need for his regination. Selectmen then accused the dog officer of calling them defamatory names on one occasion. Yokum denied the accusation.

"Selectman (Rocco) Laugelle warned Mr. Yokum not to threaten anyone and added that the Board and the Executive Secretary had spoke to him several times about the reports and about his overall way of dealing with the public," according to the approved minutes of the closed meeting.

That was when Yokum offered his resignation and told selectmen that in order to do a good job, the town would have to pay $50,000. He added that he was "sorry to be an employee of the Town of Cohasset."

Selectmen Diane Sullivan, James Gallagher and Laugelle voted 3-0 to accept Yokum's resignation, with two weeks severance pay. The meeting was opened and selectmen took a second identical vote on the matter.

Selectmen turn down sprinkler system article

A proposal passed by town meeting last year but later rejected by the attorney general, will not be placed in the warrant this year.

Despite previous approval of a town bylaw that would require water sprinkler systems in new residential construction, selectmen did not take action on the proposal, which in effect made it ineligible for placement in the April warrant.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock resurrected the proposal this year after the state attorney general rejected the proposed bylaw change last year. According to the chief, the attorney general felt the regulation was already contained within the state building code and the town need only accept that proposal.

The chief decided to try again in April to coincide with proposed legislation which would enable local communities to enforce the regulation as town bylaw.

But during selectmen's review of the proposed warrant articles Monday night, selectmen split the vote on whether to allow the article into the warrant. Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and James Gallagher did not support the article and refused to allow it into the warrant. Selectman Cliff Mitman voted to insert it in the warrant if the proper wording was prepared in time for the printing of the warrant. And Selectman Diane Sullivan, although personally against the proposal which would add an average $3,000 to the cost of a a new home, voted to allow it into the warrant.

By virtue of the 2-2 tie, there was no action taken on the proposal and the article was denied access into the warrant.

The fire chief failed to get a second fire safety proposal into the town meeting warrant. This suggested bylaw would require all boarding houses to install water sprinkler systems. The bylaw would apply retroactively to all existing boarding houses, which includes The Red Lion Inn and Kimballs by the Sea.

The proposal was defeated when selectmen refused to make a motion to accept it into the warrant. By parlimentary rules if a motion is not made, a proposal is not considered for a vote by the board.

All four selectmen voiced their objections to the retroactive portion of the bylaw, saying it would be costly for the old Red Lion building to be fitted with a complete sprinkler system.

It was during this discussion that selectmen were alerted that a smoke detector inspection had not been made by the fire chief at The Red Lion Inn. The chief explained that because the former owners did not solicit an inspection, it was not completed. He said he informed selectmen prior to the board's issuance of an innkeeper's license to the new owners.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said that the owners should be notified that if an inspection is not done, the innkeepers license may not be renewed in the future.

Selectmen also denied a request by the fire chief for a $8,000 personal computer for use by the department. In addition to ambulance billing and record keeping, the computer could be used for training programs for the firefighters, Chief Brock said.

Selectman Mitman suggested that until the chief assesses how the part-time clerk may be utilized more efficiently, he could not say how much a computer will assist the department in its clerical work.

Selectmen did approve the placement of two other fire department warrant articles. The first requests $45,000 to refurbish the department's pumper. That money includes the cost of repairing rust damage to the body and an engine overhaul and additional equipment.

A second article requests $18,500 less trade-in on the current chief's cruiser, to purchase a new car for the fire chief. This was a request that was deferred from last year's town meeting warrant, the chief said. Selectmen voted Monday to allow that article into the 1987 warrant.

In other town meeting warrant action Monday night, selectmen voted to allow two water department-sponsored articles into the warrant.

The first article requests $45,000 for the repair of the flat roof at the water department office building at Lily Pond. According to Supt. Ben Curley, it is only a matter of time before the leaks spread and destroy valuable electrical equipment at the department headquarters.

The second article was voted for placement, although Selectman Diane Sullivan opposed the proposal which would raise water rates by two percent to a minmum level of $2.10 per 100 cubic feet. Sullivan opposed the motion, noting that North Cohasset residents served by Hingham Water Co. still pay a higher fee of $2.71 per 100 cubic feet.

"I'm voting not to accept this article for the rate increase," she explained, "because its disproportionate to the town and its residents. I don't want to see anyone unduly charged, but I don't want to see a benefit that one-third of us will not have. I feel strongly that all user rates be comparable."

Under the proposal by the water commission, the rates would be streamlined so that all residents and businesses pay $2.10 for the first 100 cubic feet of water, and a slightly higher charge for additional use. Hingham's rate is $2.71 per cubic foot, which is the same cost as Hull. Scituate's rate is less because of the number of town wells, Curley explained.

The department also proposed a 25 percent increase in the fire hydrant rental fee, which will mean an additional $20,000 charge to the fire department next year.

Selectmen voted to accept the roof article, noting that $5,000 in water department revenue will be put aside for the cost of the roofing.

The board voted 3-1 to accept the water rate proposal into the town meeting warrant.

Among the other articles included in the April town meeting warrant is a request by Town Accountant Jo-Ann Whittemore to purchase a 600 words-a-minute high volume printer for the town's computer system. Whittemore explained that whenever town departments need extensive printing done, the current 150 words-a-minute printer breaks down. She estimated the printer would cost $15,000 at the most, although bids would be solicited for the equipment.

Selectmen also accepted a special article for $2,500 for additional enhancements to the Data National computer system. Several towns are pooling these enhancement programs together, she explained, for use by the contributing member towns. Cohasset's share of the 'pool' is $2,500.

Selectmen also approved the placement of three proposed changes to the zoning bylaw proposed by the planning board. One would apply to the division of land excluding all land within the water protection district, the water resources district, and the floodplain.

A second proposed article would require variation in the design and standards of all new cluster developments.The planning board is suggesting that there be variation in the planning, building materials, floor area and costs of the individual homes within the cluster development, planning board member Dan Cotton explained.

The third article accepted into the warrant will require a special permit for guest houses within residential sections A,B, and C. All other accessory residential buildings within those district will not require the special permit.

Sewer commission wants to investigate. . .

And in the minutes of the Nov. 6 meeting, it was stated, "Commissioner Guild questioned why there seemed to be high readings on a regular basis. Mr. Salvador said, 'I don't have the answer.' He suggested the Commission might employ a consultant."

In a related matter, residents reportedly made several complants Sunday night about an odor in the vacinity of the James Brook-harbor area. They forwarded the complaints to the police and fire department which were relayed to health agent Joseph Godzik.

Commission chairman Charles DeSantis said there is no record of the calls made to the police department, and the identity of the callers is not known. He said the commission would like to know who was complaining, so they could make a full investigation of what time the odors were detected and exactly from where they emanated.

Dr. Godzik informed the YWC chief operator about the complaints. Roger Goudreau, YWC plant operator, said he was called into the plant late Sunday night. "I checked everything - to see if maybe a pump was down. But everything seemed normal here."

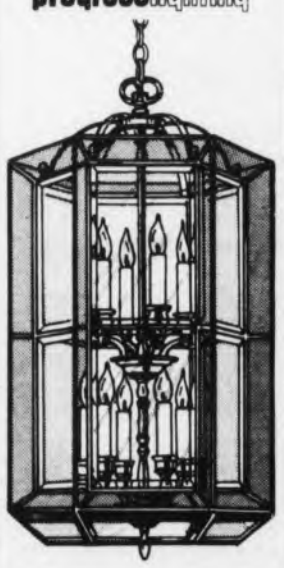
He said no action was taken as a result of the odor complaints. "Everything was clean," he noted. Goudreau said the odors, which he did not detect at the plant, were not dangerous because the plant was operating in a proper manner.

He explained that unusually high water flows have occurred at the plant in recent days because of the snow thaw. It is a temporary condition, he said, explaining that YWC will send in extra personnel to figure how the extra water flow into the plant will be handled.

Cohasset, he said, will be sent a permanent plant operator from YWC in two weeks. His name is Jim Riley, a certified grade four operator with 12 years experience.

Goudreau said once he arrived at the plant Sunday, no additional complaints were made about an odor in the harbor area.

Sewer commission chairman DeSantis said there is no record of who called to complain about the odor or where exactly it came from. In order to define what the problem was, DeSantis said they need to know who was calling into police and fire officials.



At this point, because the smell was gone by Monday, the commission can only speculate that it may have been caused by extremely low tides in the harbor mud flats. Although one resident reported that a grease trap or manhole cover near the restaurant in the harbor was opened, an inspection was made by the plant operator Sunday night. He reported that all covers and grease traps were closed.

Leonard leads, children listen to each other

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

When Ed Leonard heard the word suicide, he was shocked. It was said by a fourth grader.

The adjustment counselor was asking a group of students "what thing they had thought about doing, but decided not to do."

"And the first answer I got was from this boy. He said suicide," Leonard recalled. "And believe me, he wasn't the only one."

Most of the kids were responding with 'typical' answers, Leonard said, such as not finishing their homework, skiing over a mogol, or smoking. But this youth, and one or two others since that occasion, have talked to the counselor about their thoughts.

"I can't hide my head and pretend it didn't happen, that it wasn't said. I told the boy that I heard him and that it was a tough feeling to have. I tried to have a positive response to him. But after that, I decided to bring in some educational materials that would deal specifically with this issue."

It was a shock to Leonard, a former guidance counselor at the high school. He is now Cohasset's first adjustment counselor, assigned to grades K-6.

"I work hard to build their trust level," Leonard explained. "And that this kid was thinking about this, whether or not I was there - that's scary. I went up to him and offered my help and I'll go back with some educational materials. The kids need to know that if they're feeling this way, they must talk with someone they trust. Children have painful feelings too."

In an effort to help students share their feelings with each other, Leonard developed a Magic Circle program for each grade level. Sitting in a circle, the students will talk about a subject introduced by Leonard.

He visited with the kindergarten students Monday morning. Along with their teacher and Leonard, the young students sat on the carpeted floor. They were asked why friends are important. Each student reponded as they proceeded in a circle.

"You have fun with them and get to play with them."

"They help you."

"Friends make you laugh."

Without much hesitation, the children followed Leonard's lead and answered with candor and insight. Leonard confided that he can share secrets with his friends.

"They're nice."

"They're not mean to you."

"They take you just the way you are."

Leonard, who is in his sixth month as adjustment counselor, said Magic Circle is a popular exercise for the students. And if they recall nothing else, Leonard said every Osgood and Deer Hill student easily remembers what happened at their monthly Magic Circle. "It's an opportunity to share their feelings and thoughts with their peers. And that is very important," he added.

"I've only been here a short while. But I'm trying to help these kids feel better about themselves. It's not a cure-all, but I'm helping to put them in the right direction. I won't alleviate all their problems, but I'll help them by being there to develop a support program of their peers."

The adjustment counselor is a fulltime position added to the elementary school program last year. Leonard spends his time equally divided between the two schools.

Every classroom is visited once a month, and the Magic Circle is performed twice monthly. The circle program enables the youngsters, even at the kindergarten age, to "focus on how we affect each other," Leonard explained.

Another portion of his preventative program is self-image building groups he has organized in the higher grades. Kids participating in these groups have been referred by teachers, parents or administrators. These kids have been identified as having problems with their feelings about themselves. Parents are contacted and made aware of the child's participation. In an eight-week program, the children do exercises in which they discuss their feelings, express their thoughts and learn to get along with their peers. "I try to keep out of their focus and let them learn from each other," Leonard said, explaining his technique of guiding but not interfering with a peer group discussion.

Their meetings, he admitted, are honest and quite candid. At the end of eight weeks, the faces of the participants may change, he predicted, but the process will be the same.

Leonard, who has an undergraduate degree in special education and a master's degree in guidance and counseling, also formed a group for children of divorced parents. These are fifth and sixth graders who have admitted to difficulties in handling a family divorce. "After we get to know each other, we take up an issue dealing with divorce and we brainstorm and we discuss how a student can solve a problem within their expertise and ability. Again, they are learning from each other These older kids are willing to verbalize that divorce may be causing them some difficulties," he added.

The concept of an adjustment counselor, he explained, is to help students feel better about themselves. "When kids are feeling bad about themselves," he noted, "they're not going to learn. The better they feel about themselves, the more successful they'll be. Look at anyone who's been successful. It's a learned skill- they're willing to take a challenge."

The adjustment counseling program, Leonard said, is "absolutely vital. If the student has a social problem with a friend or at home, they will go to school and we expect them to read. But a problem makes it difficult, so we try to solve their problem. And if it is a chronic problem, they may need more than I can give them." Leonard admitted he will decide quickly whether a student needs more intensive, individualized counseling than he receives through the school program.

Although Cohasset was one of the last systems on the South Shore to develop an adjustment counseling program, it was hard-fought by school administrators and teachers. Leonard was hired for the position, but he did not include any reference materials or textbooks in his operating budget.

The counselor has requested some reference and resource materials for next year, based on a needs assessment he completed this first year of the program. That library will be available to other teachers and parents.

On the whole, Leonard concluded, Cohasset school children are "very well cared for and loved. For the most part, they have their needs taken care of in a positive way. Overall, I'd say the teachers and the parents of Cohasset are doing a fine job. This is really an ideal situation here, we have a lot things going for us."

No changes are proposed for next year's program. "I have a set of plans that are working very well now," he noted. "All we need is time and patience. Because we are after all, working with human beings"

Vo-Tech celebrates anniversary

The South Shore Vocational Technical High School in Hanover is celebrating its 25-year history which, over the years, has literally risen up out of the cellar into the light of the technological age.

In 1962, the regional school, the first in Massachusetts, opened its doors to a new form of education —one where academic subjects are interrelated with hands-on training. Now after witnessing the progress of its training programs during the last quarter century, administrators at the school say it's time to reckon with proven success.

"We're not waging war against academic education and I don't think South Shore needs to compete with academic high schools because there are so many different ways to learn," said Superintendent Clifford Easton. "We need to tell our story."

Easton outlined the advantages of a vocational education last Wednesday during a press luncheon in a school-operated restaurant at the Abington campus to kick off the 25th anniversary celebration.

To highlight the school's vital history, former students — among them a Plymouth County Commissioner, successful businessmen and Vo-Tech teachers — explained how South Shore Vo-Tech had trained them for the future.

Handicapped month

March has been designated Handicapped Awareness Month at Osgood School.

Children in all grades will be learning what it is like to be handicapped — blind, deaf, physically disabled, mentally retarded, learning disabled, or emotionally disabled. These sessions are presented by the teachers and by volunteers, using materials mainly produced by the Children's Museum.

Tuesday, Feb. 10 from 10-11 a.m., in the Osgood Library, there will be a brief overview of these sessions. The school invites anyone who might be interested in helping with one or two sessions in March, or anyone who wants to learn about the program, to join.

The program is fun, we work directly with the children, and the materials are easy to understand. Please call Taffy Noth n agle 383-0895, or the school office, if you are interested.

around town

☐ Have you seen the Robert Thompsons beaming around town? They sure are, and with good reason! Their son, Doug, has been awarded the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Silver Medal for Exceptional Service, for his work in the area of wetlands protection. Doug heads EPA's wetland protection for New England, and is based in Boston. The silver medal was given to him for the work that he did in preventing the filling of an Attleboro wetland to build a shopping mall. It was this decision that played an important role in establishing wetland protection as a top priority environmental issue at EPA. That isn't the only medal that he has earned, he has received two regional bronze medals for his work in wetlands protection as well! Although he now lives in Ashland, Cohasset can still claim him as being ours, and we're proud to do so! Now when you see Mr. Thompson strolling down the halls of CHS with a smile that is bigger than ever (he always smiles!), you'll know why! Congratulations, Doug!

☐ Everyone at Town Hall is counting the days until Connie Jones returns to her post as assistant Town Clerk. We all wish Connie a speedy recovery -we miss you!

VFW Post 9146 Commander Ralph Perroncello (center) was the recipient of an award for 100 percent post membership. The honor was given to Perroncello from District 12 Commander John Franz (r) and Bill Higgins.

☐ Harry J. Judd, Jr. of Jerusalem Road, has graduated from the International Auction School. Harry, who is an alumnus of the University of Massachusetts, received his Certificate of Auctioneering on Sunday, January 11, at the School which is located in South Deerfield, Massachusetts.

In addition to his experience in auctioneering he also received training in many areas including appraising and the legal aspects of auctioneering.

Harry brings to his auctioneering and appraising many years of experience in collecting antiques. He is knowledgeable in a wide variety of fields, including furniture, porcelain and art. He will be conducting auctions and appraisals for estates and consignors on the South Shore.

☐ Have some news about your family? Give me a call and I'll tell everyone about it. We'd all love to hear it.

Articles of merit

It appears the warrant for the annual town meeting will be a busy one.

Selectmen are in the process of accepting suggested articles from department heads. There are some big money articles and some policy changes proposed for the coming year.

Although they have accepted many of the articles submitted by department supervisors, selectmen have not yet voted whether to support them. Those votes will come at later meetings.

But the public has a sense of how selectmen feel about several of the articles, simply by listening to their discussions as they review the proposals. There is no guarantee that all proposed articles will be included into the town meeting warrant, therefore selectmen must use their subjective judgment to decide which ones merit submission. In that respect our town officials must in reality, express some sort of an opinion on the articles. If all four selectmen oppose the concept of one article,there is a likelihood it will not be accepted for the warrant.

Selectmen reviewed several articles proposed this week by the fire chief. They denied one article which requested a computer for the fire department's use, noting that the $8,000 expenditure was not a necessity. Selectmen, as watchdogs of the budget items requested in this warrant, add the numbers carefully while reviewing these proposals.

And, as selectman Diane Sullivan noted, April's warrant looks like an expensive one. There will be plenty of big-ticket items including a police and fire station renovation plan, added engineering money for Milliken Field and now a proposal to refurbish the Engine 3 pumper for $45,000. Understandably, voters will be unable to accept all these articles, so it will be up to the taxpayers to select a priority list, aided by the capital budget committee's recommendations.

It's a difficult job to review all these warrant requests, big and small, complex and straightforward. It takes long hours from the selectmen's agenda to review and discuss the merits of each article that is proposed before them.

What we don't understand is when selectmen accept a series of articles from various department heads, fully in opposition but acknowledging the taxpayers' right to vote on them, and then immediately turn around and deny another article because of their personal bias against it.

We are speaking of selectmen's refusal to include the fire chief's proposal to require sprinkler systems in all new residential construction. You may remember this is the same article that passed by voice vote at last year's town meeting, but was later rejected by the state attorney general. This year, the fire chief proposed the article, explaining that if a proposal now before the legislature is approved, the town need only accept the wording of that law. This would satisfy the attorney general's problem with local bylaw versus state law.

But because two selectmen are opposed to the proposal, they refused to allow it into this year's warrant. It is interesting to note that selectman Sullivan voted against the proposal last year, but voted Monday night to include it in the town meeting warrant for April.

Now it seems to us that no matter how you look at this one, it's unfair. Town meeting voted for it last year, - whether by a landslide or not makes no difference. It should have been allowed a place in this year's warrant.

A second article proposed by the chief was also disallowed. This would require a complete water sprinkler system for all boarding houses in the town. In Cohasset, this would mean systems for The Red Lion Inn and Kimball's. As selectmen noted, it would cost Red Lion a fortune to install the system in that old structure.

Selectmen rightfully argued that at least for now, the smoke detector regulations should be strictly enforced, something that was not followed by the former owners of The Red Lion at the time of sale. They requested that the fire chief follow up on that procedural oversight.

And in the meantime, they argued that such a bylaw which would entail acceptance of a state law, would be a financial burden on the owners of the two "boarding houses." This indeed may be the case, but who are they to preclude fire safety for finances? If one life is saved by a water sprinkler system, a proven method of halting the spread of fire in homes and buildings, would it not be worth the cost of the system's installation?

Surely this would be an unpopular proposal from the standpoint of the town's innkeepers, but it is a proposal with merit and intelligence. We believe the residents of Cohasset have a right to vote on this issue - and selectmen do not have the authority to deny a townwide discussion on this important and controversial matter.

Cong. Studds to chair Fisheries Comm.

U.S. Rep. Gerry Studds (D-MA) has been selected to serve as chairman of the subcommittee on fisheries and wildlife conservation and the environment of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

"I will use my new assignment to recommend significant changes in federal policies and attitudes towards the marine environment, to lend needed support to commercial and sports fishermen, and to examine the adequacy of management programs for fish and wildlife resources throughout the United States," Studds said in a brief statement released by his Washington office.

"I intend to be an active and energetic chairman, and I will make full use of the subcommittee's broad range of jurisdiction," Studds said. Rep. Studds was chosen during a caucus of committee Democrats at which subcommittee chairmanships and memberships were determined for the 100th Congress.

Under the rules of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, the Subcommittee now chaired by Studds has jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to fisheries (sport and commercial, domestic and international) and wildlife, including research restoration, refuges and conservation, and general jurisdiction over the National Environment Policy Act. Among the major laws written in whole or in part by the Subcommittee are the Fisheries Conservation and Management Act (the 200 mile law), the Endangered Species Act, the Coastal Barrier Resources Act, the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act, the Alaska National Interest Land Claims Act, and the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act.

Because of his selction as chairman of the fisheries subcommittee, Rep. Studds will no longer be able to serve as chairman of the subcommittee on Coast Guard and navigation, a position he has held since 1981. Congressman Studds will continue to serve as a member of the Coast Guard subcommittee, however, and he expressed his intention to "remain very active in helping the Coast Guard obtain the resources it must have to do its many jobs in support of the American people."

During the committee's organizing session, Studds also won assignments to the subcommittee on oceanography and the subcommittee on oversight and investigations.

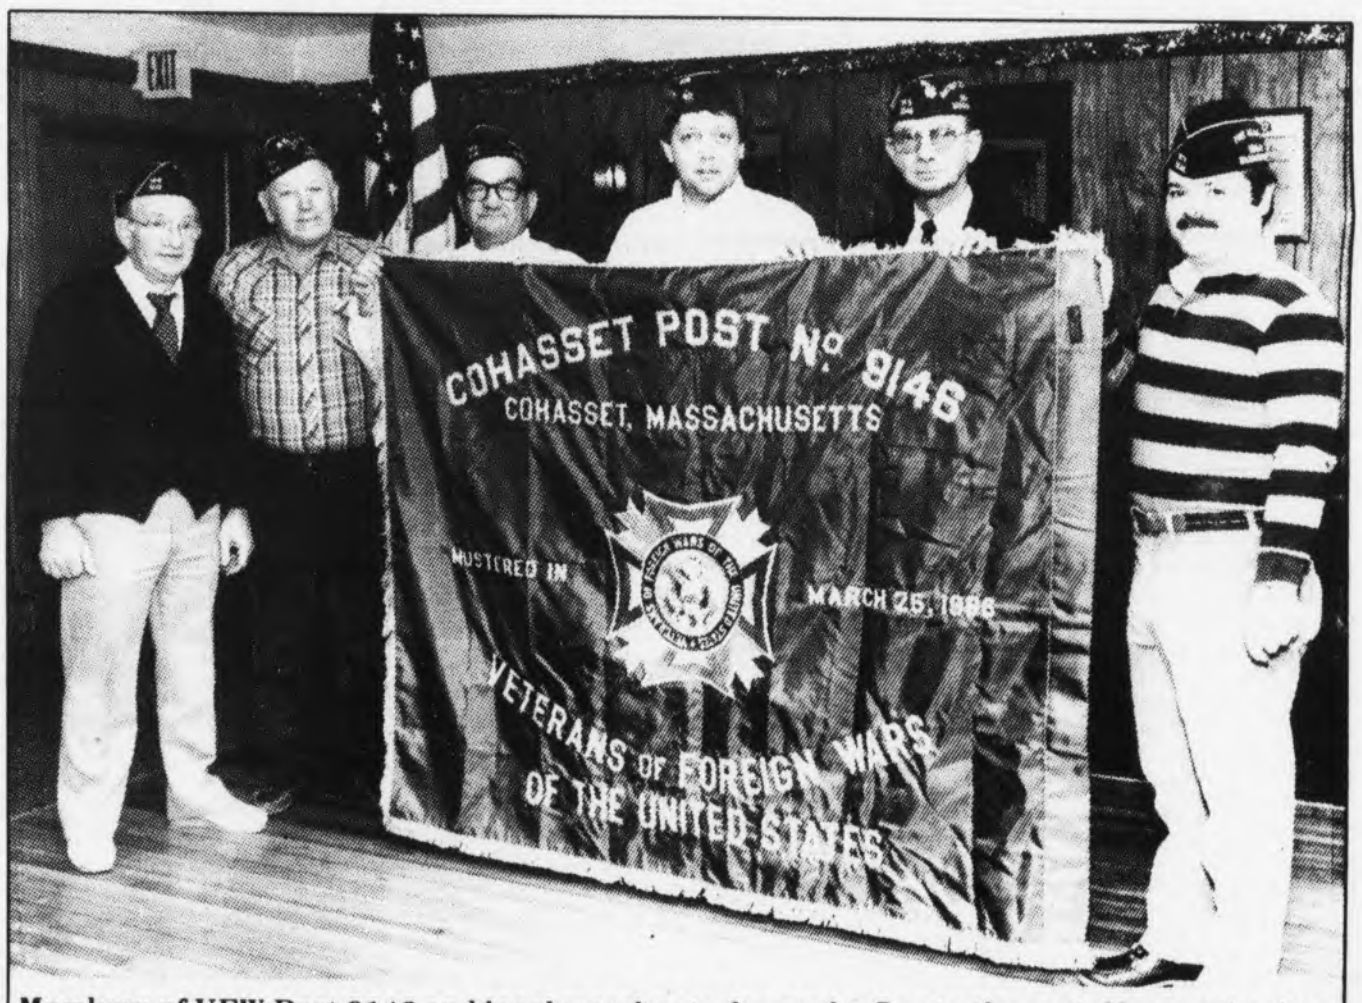
How Massachusetts aided creation of Constitution

By David Wadsworth
Chairman Constitutional
Bicentennial Committee



1987 is the Bicentennial year of the American Constitution, an occasion being marked by nationwide observances. During the spring and summer of 1787 our nation's founding document was drafted, written, and signed at the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, then sent to the individual states for their ratification. On February 21, 1787, the Congress of the Confederation, our nation's governing body under the original Articles of Confederation, had given its cautious approval to a plan advanced at the Annapolis Convention of the previous year for the holding of a convention of all states to make needed and far-reaching changes in the loosely-knit Articles of Confederation. The early months of 1787 saw each state setting about to pick delegates for the forthcoming convention to be held in Philadelphia. Massachusetts, one of the most populous and influential of ther 13 states, did not lack for illustrious names from which to pick a delegation. Leading public figures of the day in the Commonwealth included its Governor John Hancock, former Governor James Bowdoin, Ambassador John Adams, the now-aging patriot Samuel Adams, and Hingham's respected Benjamin Lincoln. They were but a few of the leading names from which the choice of a delegation might be made. Those particular men, however, were not chosen; being either passed over by the Legislature or otherwise occupied on important government business. (Gen. Benjamin Lincoln had just recently returned from putting down the infamous Shays' Rebellion in western Massachuetts and James Bowdoin had lost the Governorship to Hancock partly because of his involvement in the suppression of that insurrection). When, in early 1787, the Massachusetts Legislature picked that state's delegates to the Philadelphia Convention, it chose five names of scarcely less stature than those whose names had been passed by. They were; Judge Francis Dana of Cambridge, Caleb Strong of Northampton, Nathaniel Gorham of Charlestown, Elbridge Gerry of Marblehead, and Rufus King of Newburyport. Of the five men chosen in early 1787, only two eventually would sign their names on the completed Constitutional document in September of that year. Judge Dana, for a variety of reasons, never went to Philadelphia; Caleb Strong attended the Convention, but with several other delegates, departed for home in July, not to return. Elbridge Gerry, perhaps the best known of the Bay State's delegates, participated in the Convention throughout and contributed to its proceedings, but declined to sign the final document because of the deep seated disagreement with one of its provisions.

The four Massachusetts delegates who actually went to Philadelphia themselves were respected public figures of experience in state and national affairs. Caleb Strong was a churchman and public servant of conservative thought and a lawyer by profession, and was the only delagate from the western part of the state. He had graduated from Harvard, and had been a member of the state legislature. Nathaniel Gorham was a former member of the provincial congress, the son of a sea captain, had been a privateer during the Revolution, and was known to be a follower of former Governor Bowdoin. Elbridge Gerry, the son of a merchant family, was a Harvard graduate, had served in the first Congress in 1776, and was a signer of both the Declaration of Independence and the Articles of Confederation. In later years, Gerry would serve as Governor of Massachusetts and as the nation's Vice President under President James Madison. Rufus King had been born in the province of Maine, was a student at Harvard and a soldier during the Revolution, and was a lawyer by profession. He had been elected to Congress in 1784. At the time of their selection as delegates to the Philadelphia Convention, Gorham's age was 49, King's was 32, and Gerry's was 43. The Constitutional Convention of 1787 was, some say, a "young man's convention" despite the presence of the veneraterd Dr. Benjamin Franklin. In total, the average age of the framers of our Constitution at the Philadelphia Convention was 43. They were representative of the new generation of national leaders who had come of age during the revolutionary years.

Of the Massachusetts delegation, Gorham was the senior member. He also was the first of the Massachusetts framers to pass away, in 1796. Caleb Strong died in 1819 after serving as Governor of the state for 5 terms. Gerry's demise was in 1814 while serving as Vice President, and King's was in 1827 following a long political career in New York. All four of these sons of Massachusetts were men having an uncommon degree of intelligence and ability which stood them in good stead during the debates and discussion leading to the creation of a new and revolutionary national Constitution during the spring and summer of 1787.

Newcomers Club meeting

A general membership meeting of the Scituate Cohasset Newcomers Club will be held Monday, Feb. 9, at 9:30 a.m. at the Unitarian Church Parish House, 23 North Main St., Cohasset.

If you are a new resident of either of these seaside communities, you are welcome to attend.

The guest speaker will be Ellin Herzog of Fashion Fabrics of North Scituate. She will feature a potpourri of notions and hands-on demonstrations, which should prove to interest the non-sewer with non-sewing techniques as well as the most accomplished seamstress.

Also, an informal coffee will be held Tuesday, Feb. 10. Give Christianne a call for directions in Scituate, 545-2814.

Babysitting is available at the general meeting only.

Free eye care for needy

A special Valentine for area residents will be offered on Feb. 13, when a Norwell optometrist offers free services to those in need.

Dr. G. Logan Eaton, of Scituate, will provide free services such as eye exams, consultations and prescriptions at his 127 Washington St., Norwell office to those who need visual attention but have no job, no insurance, no welfare and no money.

The program will be available from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and is Dr. Eaton's contribution to a national program, "Doctors with a Heart," for those who wish to help others who have experienced difficult times.

For more information, call 878-2020 for an appointment or walk in during the office hours.

Ridge Hill applications

The Ridge Hill School of Norwell is now accepting applicants for admission to its early childhood educational programs for the coming school year.

The Ridge Hill School is a private, non-profit early childhood education center, offering a developmental non-sectarian program. The school is open from 8 a.m. to 5:30 daily. Children may enroll for a minimum of 3 mornings per week, and up to a full day schedule. There is a separate section for kindergarten-age children. The school also offers an elementary-aged after-school program.

A subsidy is available to qualified applicants meeting income, working or training guidelines established through a state funded program.

For further information, call the school at 871-4440.

Quilt block contest

A pieced design featuring triangles is the 1987 pattern choice for the Marshfield Fair quilt block contest. Prizes will be awarded for 20 winning blocks.

For complete details and a page of tips based on previous contests, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Quilt Block Contest, Box 168, Marshfield Hills, MA 02051. The contest closes June 1, 1987.

The country arts committee of the fair sponsors the contests. After winners are selected in June, the blocks are sewn into a quilt, then quilted at the Marshfield Fair in late August. Volunteers come from many South Shore towns, as well as Cambridge and Cape Cod to sit in on the quilting. Last year winners from Acton and Herkimer, N.Y., did some of the sewing.

All blocks received are displayed at the fair, and visitors are invited to vote on their favorite. A popular vote prize was won by Nancy Howes of Wrentham. Visitors also asked to buy blocks, and 20 were sold, with the permission of their owners. Others were returned to the owner.

Adult beginner ballet

Because of a great demand on the South Shore, Adult Beginner Ballet classes, sponsored by the Children's Ballet Workshop in Hingham, will begin February 14. Classes will be conducted by Mrs. Stephanie Anderson.

For more information, call 749-3737.

Vacation art classes

With February school vacation fast approaching, the South Shore Art Center will again offer its very popular Child's Vacation Drop-in Program.

The daily drop-in program will meet February 17, through February 20, from 10:30 a.m. to noon at 103 Ripley Road, in Hingham at the Community Center and in Scituate at the Congregational Church. Young artists will work on daily painting, drawing or collage activities. No pre-enrollment is necessary for this program.

The informal drop-in program offers children an excellent opportunity to experiment with their creativity and to expand their artistic horizons. The Center's young artist staff will work with the participants on the daily projects.

All supplies are included in the $3 per day workshop fee. The drop-in is funded by the Joseph Drown Foundation.

For further information, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548. The Center is funded in part by a grant from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanitites, a state agency.

Psi Symposium meeting

The public is invited to attend a meeting of Unitarian Universalist Psi Symposium on Sunday, Feb. 8, at 7:30 p.m. at First Parish Unitarian Church, 24 River St., Norwell.

The speaker will be Joanne Sherwood, yoga and meditation teacher and healer and herbalist, who will speak on "Healing with Crystals and Pendulums."

The meeting is $2 for members or a $3 donation for non-members.

For more information, call the church at 659-7122.

GET A 1986 IRA TAX DEDUCTION BEFORE SOX SEASON STARTS.

OR WATCH YOUR LAST GREAT CHANCE SLIP BY.

If you think the new tax laws have fouled up 1986 IRAs, think again.

For tax year 1986, nothing's changed. The same eligibility and deductibility rules apply as in previous years. You can still get the same great tax benefits. But only if you make your 1986 IRA contribution by April 15. (That's about the time Sox Manager John McNamara starts getting a few more gray hairs.)

As for tax year 1987, it's a whole new ballgame. We've put together a free booklet that explains the changes, and helps give you a winning edge on your 1987 IRA.

To get the booklet, and to get a great IRA for 1986, 1987, or both, visit Quincy Savings Bank today. Or call 471-3500.

JACKANSONS

P.O. BOX 1449 834-6300

Dear Customers and Friends,

Over the past several months I have been involved in ongoing negotiations to sell Jackansons.

After almost 6 years in Marshfield this was a tough decision, but one that I felt was necessary given the many circumstances that go with owning a business that is open 7-days a week and 363-days a year.

These negotiations, to sell Jackasons, have been unsuccessfully concluded, and the same competent staff will continue to operate the store in the manner which you have come to expect over these past 6 years.

T.G.L.W., we will be here for another 6-plus years, and I would like to personally thank each and everyone of you for contributing to our success and the many kind words which you have expressed to me recently.

Sincerely,

Jack Danahy

P.S. You're still going to have to listen to the Irish music, Joe.

Raffle for beauty services

Charlotte Hair, Etc. is helping the South Shore Art Center open the doors of their new building in a unique way. Those who make a donation to the Art Center's Capital Campaign through this special offer will also be eligible to win a $250 gift certificate for any of the many beauty services at Charlotte's salon.

For each $5 of gift value to the Capital Campaign, donors will have a chance on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for any of the following at Charlotte's: hair cutting, styling, coloring, perms or conditioning treatments; scalp massage, facials, tanning, manicures, makeup application; or cosmetics, nail and skin care products, gifts or jewelery.

If, for example, a donation of $50 is made, the donor will be entitled to 10 coupons in the drawing. Donations must be accompanied by a raffle coupon or marked "Charlotte's Spring Drawing" (See ad this issue) and be sent to the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset 02025 by March 16. The drawing will be held at Charlotte's on March 20. Those eligible for the drawing need not be present.

Charlotte Phinney, owner of the Stagecoach Way salon, has watched the Art Center's expansion project take shape from across the Town parking lot. In addition to the aesthetic improvement of the corner now occupied by the emerging two and-a-half story headquarters for the Center, she is enthusiastic about the potential of the Center's programs and services. "The new Art Center will benefit the whole village and surrounding towns," Phinney says.

Lee holds a Master of Music degree from Eastman School of Music, where he is currently a Doctoral Candidate. A finalist at the International Organ Competition in Bruges, Belgium in 1982 and 1985, the review from his 1985 performance stated that "the air was filled with a super-charged emotionalism that caused the audience to hold its applause several seconds following the conclusion of the final piece, before it burst into thunderous ovation." Special to the Mariner

One of my dreams is that if I play my cards right in this life, I'll come back as a hummingbird in the next. A hummingbird eats twice its body weight in food daily without gaining a fraction of an ounce. Can you imagine the sheer ecstasy of almost constant, guilt-free eating?

Unfortunately, I haven't found a way to make these fantasies of gluttony come true. I'm not here to present you with some magical "hummingbird diet," guaranteed to take off pounds and inches even as you continue to eat, eat, eat.

What does the hummingbird analogy have to do with you? You don't eat flower nectar and insects, nor do you have wings that beat eighty times per second. But you can learn from a creature who, while eating continuously, is also in constant motion.

Movement — that seems to be the secret. Sure, diet is important. Don't overeat. Cut way back on the fats. Don't be afraid of complex carbohydrates like fruit, pasta, potatoes and whole grain breads; in fact, add them to your daily food intake.

Dieting may give you an initial quick weight loss — much of it fluid weight. But don't most of us really want to lose fat?

What many dieters don't realize is that when you try to lose weight by dieting, that is cutting your caloric intake to somewhere around 1000 calories or even less, you lose mostly lean muscle tissue. Then when you go off your diet, even briefly, you gain back fat rather than healthy lean muscle.

So you diet and diet and get fatter and fatter. Another factor comes into play too. When you cut your caloric intake way back, your body thinks it's starving and reacts by slowing down its metabolic rate. Your body is actually trying not to burn the few calories you're taking in.

Often it's the fat person who drinks diet soda and lives on 500 calories a day, far fewer calories than the thin person. Your body tries to conserve those calories — how does your body know there's not a famine going on? Then, because even the most disciplined person can't stay at five hundred calories forever, you start eating a paltry 700 calories, and gain weight. Worse, you gain it back in fat, not the lean muscle you originally lost.

What's the answer? Throw out the diet soda and drink water. Throw out the diet books and buy a basic nutrition book. And, most importantly, if you want to change your body, get moving!

Thin people move. Fat people become "couch potatoes." Thin people never seem to be still; they naturally move more, whether it's exerting more effort in an exercise class, or crossing and recrossing their legs while watching TV.

Fat people have efficiency of movement down to a science. When they sit, they sit. When they need something, they ask a thin person to get it.

Yes, I'm generalizing, and probably being a bit unfair. But the point is a valid one. If you want to get thinner, move more. You've got to watch what you eat, but not as carefully as you've got to watch how you move.

The most efficient fat burner is aerobic exercise. Aerobic exercies burns fat not just while you're exercising, but it speeds up your metabolism for several hours after exercising, in effect, making your body burn calories like a thinner person.

Aerobic exercise includes any exercise which uses large muscle groups and that can be maintained continuously. You should be able to get your pulse up to 65-85 percent of its maximum and keep it there for 20 to 30 minutes. You need to do this at least three times a week for cardiovascular improvement.

However, if you really want to lose weight, and more importantly, fat, you've got to do some form of aerobic exercies six days a week, maybe even daily.

It's not as tough as it sounds. I don't care how busy you are; if it's important to you, you can find 20 free minutes a day. Park farther from work and walk. Take a brisk walk at lunch. Swim, cross-country ski, skate, bicycle, row, jump rope. Join a safe aerobics class.

Sometimes you need to be creative. I've been known to park my son's carriage in the center of the high school football field, get my three-year old daughter bicycling around the surrounding track and jog beside her. I've ridden a stationary bike while carrying a baby in a baby pack. I know people who stair-step (up four steps frontwards, down four steps backwards) for twenty minutes while they watch soap operas.

Make it a family affair. Put some music on and jog in place or around the house for twenty minutes before dinner. The younger kids will love it. The older ones will think you're strange but what else is new?

You won't see initial quick results you get with starvation diets. But, if you don't overeat, you will lose, and what you lose will be fat, not lean muscle. As your lean muscle tissue increases in proportion to your fat tissue, your rate of burning calories will improve, because more calories are used to sustain muscle than fat.

Of course, you may have to become more size than weight conscious. Muscle simply weighs more than fat. I've known people to drop two sizes without losing a pound when they start to exercise. I've often advised people to put the scale away and buy a full length mirror. Substitute the weekly weigh-in with a weekly disrobing before the mirror. When you can stand to really look at yourself, front and back, you've made progress.

In short, take a lesson from the hummingbird. Stop starving yourself and get moving!

Real Men do aerobics

Let's hear it for the men who, in ever increasing numbers, are overcoming the fear that everyone will be looking at them and taking that first scary leap into an aerobics class.

Statistically, men are at higher risk for cardiovascular disease than women, and thus have an ever greater need for the cardiovascular fitness provided by aerobic exercise.

Many men have tight hamstring and lower back muscles and have very little flexibility. A good aerobics class ends with a safe, gentle stretching segment.

Coordination and stamina both improve greatly through a good aerobics class. In turn, your performance in other sports and leisure activities will improve.

SKATING

With cold weather, hence, ice skating season approaching, the following should be used as a guideline for safe ice. Common sense is the most important denominator:

	0-30 degrees	30-40 degrees	40-50 degrees
Single Skaters	1-3/4 inches	2-3/4 inches	six inches
Couples	2-3/4	3-3/4 inches	eight inches
Crowds	3-3/4 inches	4-3/4 inches	12 inches

These figures are for clear, fresh water ice only; for snow ice, add two inches; for water-logged ice, add three inches; if skates cut in — Go Home! Salt water in mild climates is always treacherous — keep away from it. Also thickness in 40-50 degree column are safe depths for short periods of time only. Testing your weight as you go.

The deepest portion of Elms Meadow is toward the Spring Street Dam (about 12"-18") the shallowest is towards the back of the area, two inches or so.

Do not throw debris on the ice to check for safety. This only clutters up the ice, making skating dangerous, and does not give you an accurate indication of ice strength.

"Hub's top savings rate: 6.25%"
—The Boston Herald September 5, 1986

At a time when other banks are actually reducing rates, a passbook savings account that pays more than most money market accounts is big news:
The Hibernia Savings Bank now pays 6.25% on its regular savings accounts. (That's an annual yield of 6.54%, based on continuous compounding.) It takes $100 to open one and you only need to maintain a balance of $10 to earn the rate.
If you like the convenience, safety and simplicity of regular passbook savings —and want rates that are better than most money market accounts — stop by and open an account with Hibernia.
It will be good news for both of us.

Special enrichment program

The PSO's support has allowed us at the Deer Hill to experience another special enrichment activity.

Dr. Rosaline Duffy, a consultant from S.M.U. presented a special Language Arts class to all the fifth graders. She showed the children slides of nature scenes while explaining the differences between close and mid and long shots. Dr. Duffy went on to demonstrate the structure of Haiku, a form of Japanese poetry.

Every student became involved in writing their own poems using a variety of photographs.

We hope you enjoy some of the children's creations.

Writing Is Like Juggling

By Liz Deveney

Steven Harris is a writer, juggler, and, as he proudly admits, an all around super cool dude. The main reason Mr. Harris came to Deer Hill School was because he wanted to show us the process of writing, and he really did! The language arts teachers are interested in the concept of "writing as a process." During January the 6th graders are involved in creative writing.

Stephen "Mike" Harris is from Vermont. His past job was in Ringling Brothers Barnum and Bailey Circus. That was how Mr. Harris learned to juggle with over five balls.

Mr. Harris is really an actor who uses music, juggling, and magic to demonstrate dramatically the process of writing.

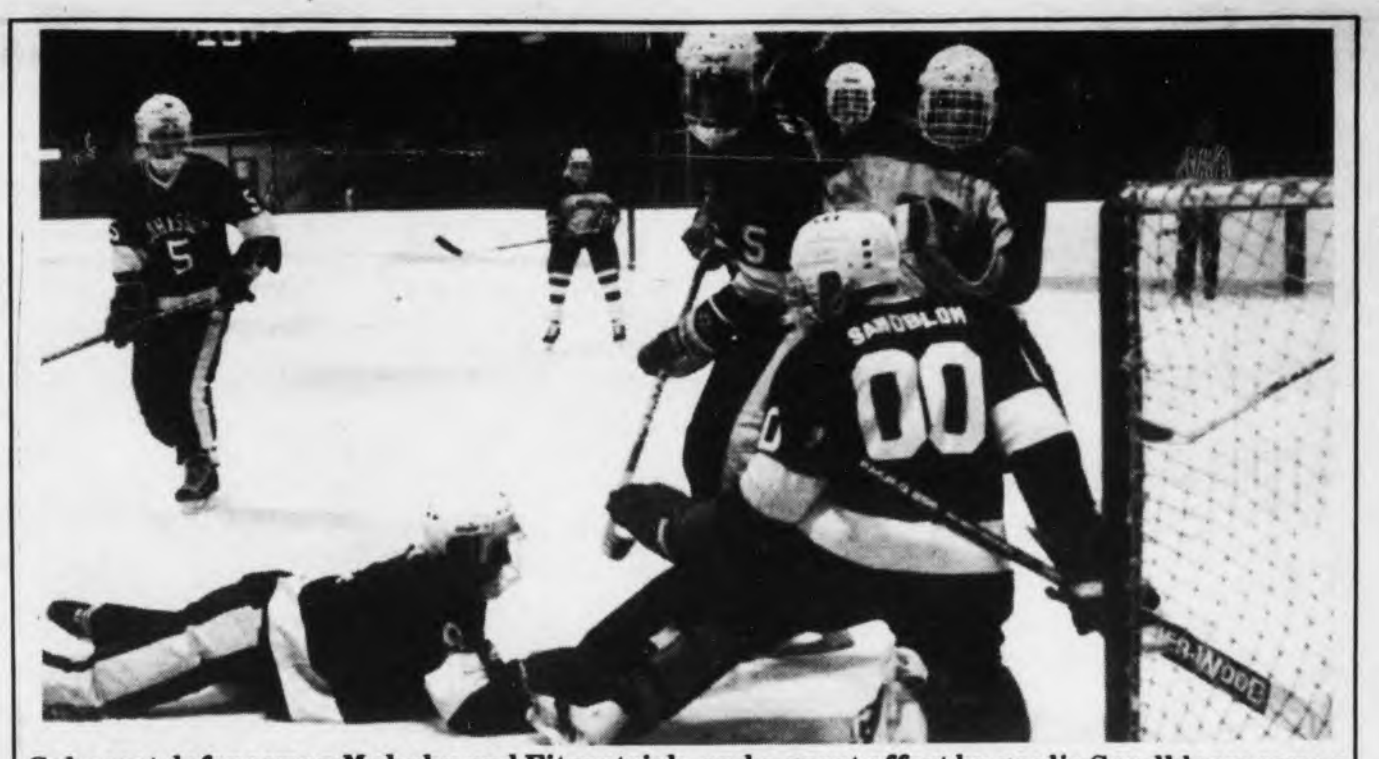
Icemen in playoff hunt

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

Wednesday, the boys crushed a very weak Whitman/Hanson team, 11-1. Coach Dennis Walsh felt the key to this decisive victory was the fact that Cohasset got off to a very quick start in the first period. In fact Cohasset's Jeff Hartwell scored three goals within the first 1:30 of the game. Jeff then went on to score four more goals for the Skippers bringing his total to seven for the game.

Danny Pompeo scored twice, and Todd Fitzpatrick and Philip Mahoney each had a goal as well. Walsh was especially impressed with the way Jeff Hartwell, Danny Pompeo, and Todd Fitzpatrick worked together as one cohesive unit on the front line.



Saturday, the boys lost a heartbreaker to Hanover 5-4. After being down 2-0, Cohasset came back to tie the game when Craig Mulcahy scored twice. Hanover then went up by a goal, but Todd Fitzpatrick tied the game with a goal, and then put Cohasset ahead by one by scoring again. Hanover tied the game and at last went ahead for good when they socred with three minutes left to make the final score 5-4. Walsh felt his team put out a tremendous effort in this game, and although he was not pleased with the outcome of the game, Walsh could not complain about how his team had played.

Walsh was especially impressed with the efforts of Peter Sandblom whom Walsh called, "the best goalie in the league." Hanover outshot Cohasset in this game 32-22, and the fact that the Skippers were even in this game was due to Peter's outstanding goaltending. Walsh also cited Craig Mulcahy as being the backbone of Cohasset's defense.

Wednesday, the boys face off against Duxbury in what is shaping up to be a must win situation for Cohasset if they want to keep their tournament hopes alive. Saturday, the Skippers play a weak Scituate team and hope to blow by them easily.

Wrestling

Wednesday, the boys lost their first league meet of the season when they were defeated by Rockland. Coach Torin Sweeney felt the loss was the direct result of injuries and illness which forced Cohasset to forfeit three weight classes which turned out to be the margin of Rockland's win.

Cohasset defensemen Mukahy and Fitzpatrick, and a great effort by goalie Sandbloom save a potential goal by their Hanover opponents.

Pete Buckley and Jim Donahue both won their matches along with Paul Froio who has been wrestling exceptionally well according to Sweeney. Both Glen Froio and Liam Stanford defeated opponents who had previously been undefeated. Glen bettered his record to 10-2, and Liam added yet another win to his flawless record which at this point stands at 13-0.

Saturday, Cohasset split a tri-meet by beating Holbrook and losing to a very strong Marshfield team. Once again Pete Buckley, Jim Donahue, Glen Froio and Liam Stanford picked up wins for Cohasset and wrestled extremely well.

This week the boys face Middleboro on Wednesday and take on Stoughton and Weymouth South in a tri-meet on Saturday.

The team now stands at 8-5 which is the most victories a Cohasset wrestling team has had since 1979. A win on Wednesday would give the team the most victories ever in the history of Cohasset wrestling. Sweeney is hopeful that his team will reach this milestone on Wednesday.

Girls' Basketball

Tuesday, in a fast paced game the girls were victorious over Duxbury by a score of 64-55. The Skippers qualified for the tournament with this win and pleased coach Bill Fallon with their efforts on offense.

Cindy Spooner dominated the game offensively with 17 points and on the boards with 18 rebounds. Maureen O'Leary also had a good game and had 16 points.

Friday, Cohasset pulverized Norwell 50-33. Fallon felt the key to this victory was his team's intense half-court defense which was sparked by the great defensive effort of Margie Murphy.

Maureen O'Leary led all scorers with 11 points followed by Melissa Shea who had nine. Debbie Hartley also had a good game for Cohasset.

Tuesday the girls travel to Middleboro, and Friday they are away against Sandwich. Two more victories this week would clinch the league title for Cohasset, and Fallon is optimistic that this goal is well within his team's grasp.

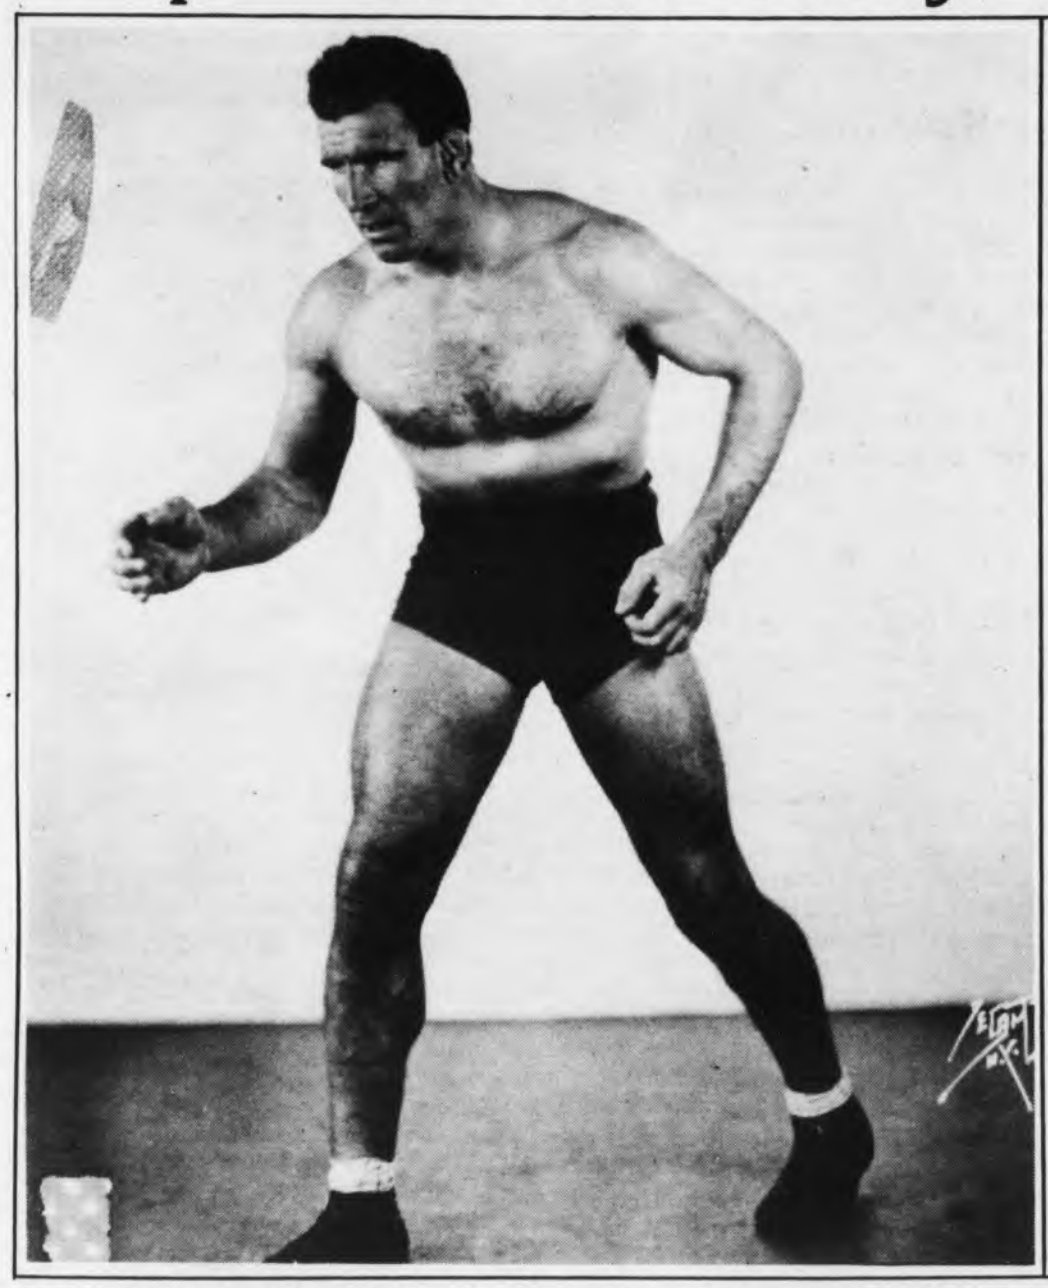
Remembering 'old pal' Crusher Casey

By George Franklin
Special to the Mariner

Wakes are something that most people do not like to attend. People do show up for a number of reasons, curiosity, to see people they usually do not see, to comfort the widow or widower and, in the case of some politicians, to have their names remembered at election time.

I recently attended a wake in Cohasset. This was for an old friend of forty seven years. Steve "Crusher" Casey had passed away. Here is where people sincerely turned out to honor a legitimate sports champion. This Irish wrestling and rowing champion took the final count from the Big C (cancer).

The Sparell-McNamara funeral home in Cohasset — the oldest funeral home on the east coast — is where Steve was laid out. I had two surprises when I entered this beautiful old building. First I met John and Robert McNamara. These two popular Brighton funeral directors had purchased this funeral home. Secondly, on the wall just as you entered was a full view picture of Steve Casey in his wrestling trunks and in color showing this Irish giant in his prime. Although Steve was Irish this picture reminded me of the statues of the ancient Greek Gods. A very striking tribute to a giant of a man.



The entire family of Caseys over their lifetime, contributed greatly to sports history. They often said that "rowing was their sport and wrestling was their business." They were the best at both as well as all other physical sports they entered. In their prime the Caseys were unbeatable.

Over the years I have lost many friends to the grim reaper. Some of these were giants in their own right, but the memory of a special pal "Steve Crusher Casey" will always remain with me.

Mary Casey has been left a widow. She is a good, strong, smart woman and, surrounded by her two handsome sons, beautiful daughter and lovely grandaughter she will survive. She can well be proud of what she has contributed to this world in the way of fine human beings.

Ernie Minnelli, the Nantasket contractor was there. With heartfelt sympathy Ernie remarked, "We have really lost an old pal."

Steve will long be remembered. There is a book planned on the life of the Caseys with hope of this becoming a sports movie. Myrtle Casey, brother Jim Casey's wife, has told this writer that they already had a video movie showing the famous Caseys rowing together while in their seventies. The film then flashes back to their childhood and how they were taught to row and then progresses upward through the years to 1986. This should be a great historical sports film.

Cohasset's legendary sports hero, Steve 'Crusher' Casey

In 1982 this family was awarded the Sports Medal of the Year in England. All of this might tell you that the likes of Brian Boru (the great Irish King who drove the Danes and the Norsemen from the Irish shores) has been re-incarnated in the likes of Steve "Crusher" Casey.

The history of the Irish Giants of old will continue as long as there are men the caliber of the Caseys to walk this earth.

You may be gone Steve but, your memory will stay forever in the sports annals of history.

Winter Garden skaters come home with honor

The Winter Garden figure skaters did it again. They just returned from the winter competition at Lake Placid in New York, armed with medals and national honors.

Young and older skaters, all members of the Ice Skating Institute of America (I.S.I.A.), combined their talents during last month's competition and gathered a fourth place team finish. That's quite an accomplishment, according to instructor Marcia Breen of Scituate. "We had only 35 competitors which is much less than most of the other 32 teams competing there," she said. "So for us to come in fourth out of 32 teams is really terrific."

The annual event at Lake Placid is the largest I.S.I.A. competition in the east. Skaters from New Jersey, New York, Maryland and as far away as Florida, competed in the winter contests. This was the third year that Cohasset participated in the prestigious event.

Cohasset's contigent, which included skaters from several South Shore communities, was among the smallest but the best, according to their coach. Skaters ranged in age from five years to "over 70 years old," Breen noted.

"The skaters in this type of competition can be anywhere from one to 100 - boys and girls. There's just no limitation," she added.

This year the skaters in the elaborate production number won second place for their efforts. The 1986 production team, which includes all 35 team members, skated to a Star Wars theme. Complete with costumes and music, the basis of a production number is to set a theme to music.

Production skaters have practiced their dance routines twice weekly since September and a little more in the weeks prior to the competition. The parents, who transport them to and from the practices, also assist with the costumes and props used during the production number.

As Debby Protulis stated, "I.S.I.A. is a very-family oriented organization.Going to Lake Placid every year is like a family vacation. Sometimes the kids were on the ice for competition from 7 in the morning and then again at midnight. So the parents really have to be there with them. If your child competes, the parents will be there to support them," she said, noting that the expense of traveling to out-of-state competition and the ice time for practice and rehearsals is also borne by the parents.

"We have to pay for the ice time by the hour, and for lessons by every 15 minutes," Protulis said. "And then there's the room and board at Lake Placid which was three nights and four days. But it's all worth it because we have such a great time. Every one of the kids comes home with a medal, either for winning the team competition or for an individual event."

Breen, she added, is nationally-recognized in production skating. "She's a leader in that event," Protulis said.

Their coach noted that the Lake Placid event is for skaters who aspire to serious competition. There are many I.S.I.A. skaters from the Winter Garden who prefer not to compete. But those that accepted the challenge, she noted, were pleased with their results.

"These kids are so good," Breen said. "We're now starting a precision skating group at a higher level than ever before. I've never seen such phenomenal skaters as I have here. We have kids, seven and eight years old who will now be competing with 11 year-olds. We're just forming that group, but it's very exciting."

Scott McCoy of Halifax, a 16 year-old Winter Garden skater, is the highest-level skater from the Cohasset contigent. He placed first in Freestyle 8 category.

And another production number, including new props and costumes will begin almost immediately as the skaters prepare for an April competition on Cape Cod.

"We have levels and categories for skaters of all ages. We take them from any age to any age," Breen noted. "The idea is to make this a family recreational program. We're having fun with this program."

These are the skaters who received medals for the Lake Placid competition:

Michelle Buckley, Cohasset, fourth in Beta; Kristin Cox, North Weymouth, fourth in Gamma; Karen Del Gallo and Lauren Wood, Cohasset, second in Couples 2; Caroline deLima, Cohasset, second in Alpha; Kate deLima, second in Gamma; Sarah Dunbar, Scituate, fourth in Delta; Jenny Fischer, Hingham, and Jackie Hoban, Cohasset, second in Couples Freestyle 3; Jenny Fischer, Hingham, second, Freestyle 4; Kevin Hayden, Hingham, and Erin Singleton, Hingham, Couples 1; Ann Healey, Hingham, first in Freestyle; Jackie Hoban, Cohasset, fourth in Freestyle 4; Kim Hoering, Hull, first in Figures 2; John Landry, Hingham, two first-place in Freestyle 3 and Spotlight 3; Kathy Leeber, Hull, first in Freestyle 4, first in Figures 2; Megan Lindholm, Hull, second in Spotlight 2, first in Delta; Megan Lindholm, Hull and Sarah Dunbar, Scituate, third in Couples 1; Scott McCoy, Halifax, first in Freestyle 8; Helene McPeck, first in Alpha, and Ray McPeck, first in Alpha; Courtney Dea, Scituate, second in Spotlight.

Vo-Tech open house

South Shore Vocational Technical High School, with campuses in Hanover and Abington will open its doors to the community on Tuesday, Feb. 10 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. The annual open house is sponsored by the students, faculty and administration of South Shore. Both campuses will be open and shuttle buses will be available to transport visitors between campuses. The Hanover campus is located at 476 Webster Street, and the Abington campus at Ralph Hamblin Lane.

The open house will allow students, their parents and the general public to view the facilities, investigate the programs and speak with members of the teaching, administrative and guidance staff. During the past several weeks eighth grade students, from the regional towns that make up the district, have been touring the campuses.

Superintendent Clifford Easton stated, "The open house will allow parents of the eighth grade students, who recently toured our building, an opportunity to view our educational facilities, talk to our staff and perhaps gain a better understanding of why their son or daughter might be interested in pursuing a program in vocational technical education."

Students in each shop will present demonstrations and examples of the type of professional work produced by the students of the school. A recently donated industrial robot, with an estimated value of $250,000 will be on display in the packaging machine mechanics shop.

Academic teachers will be available to discuss their courses and extracurricular activities. The members of the physical education department will also be available to answer questions regarding the varsity, junior varsity and intramural sports program.

The Hanover campus offers training in the career fields of automotive, auto body, heating ventilation and air conditioning, welding, precision metal fabrication, machine shop, drafting, carpentry and electronics.

South Shore Vocational Technical High School is a regional school with an enrollment of 540 students. Member towns are Hanover, Rockland, Whitman, Hanson, Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell and Abington.

In the event of snow the open house will be held on Thursday, Feb. 12.

Officials advise not to call police during storm from the cruisers on road conditions. If it's still snowing, I check the weather forecasts to see if it will continue.

"The primary concern," he noted, "is to see that the children are safe."

If Hart decides to cancel classes for the day, he calls to have the fire department blow its whistle at 7 a.m. He also calls the Metco coordinator, the assistant supt. and the school principals, who notify faculty and staff members.

"Delayed openings," he explained, "are used only in very specific situations, when you know you have a certain amount of time until the roads are clear."

The superintendent also calls local radio and television stations, using a special code so they know the call is legitimate. "WEEI has a computer from which other stations can pick up the information," he said. "I also call WBZ, WJDA and WHDH. I call as soon as I can."

To curious residents, he recommended listening to radio and television, or listening for the fire whistle.

"I encourage people not to call the police department or fire department for information," Hart said. "It's burdensome on the police when they get hundreds of calls."

Police Chief Joseph Kealey echoed the sentiments of Supt. Hart.

"It's worse now than it has ever been," he said. "We have major problems. No one could get through to report an accident."

He explained, the three phone lines which run into the police station are swamped with calls on snowy mornings.

"During a two hour period," he said, "we handle as many as 300 to 400 calls. We usually have two men out and one at the desk, but when this happens, we have to pull a patrolman in off the street.

"People must be trained to call another number for school information," Kealey commented; "they've got to get away from calling the public safety agencies."

"We get calls at the school," Hart said, "and we're glad to get them. We try to be there to answer the phone."

Although snow storms have forced him to close the schools twice already this school year because of snow, Hart said, if at all possible, he prefers to open the schools.

He explained, most parents would prefer school be held, because they work and it is not easy for them to make arrangements quickly.

"The state requires we hold classes 180 days," he noted. "Snow days don't count. The only time that requirement was waived, was after the blizzard of 1978.

"Kids think they have a free day," he said, "and even adults get accustomed to it."

Hart explained, five snow days are figured into the school calendar. If there were no snow days, school would have let out for the summer, June 19. Because classes have been cancelled in Cohasset twice this year, summer vacation will not begin until June 23.

"This has been a tough winter so far," Hart commented. "I'm thankful most of the snow has come on weekends." If February and March dump a lot of snow on Cohasset, summer vacation will be pushed back further.

"We don't want to be going to school in July."

Fairoaks resident complains about inaction

Marshfield in which a bad smell was caused by hydrogen sulphide in a nearby commercial landfill. Lethal levels of sulphide were found near a wellhead, he explained, and a high concentration was discovered in private homes. The situation was corrected by an aeration system and monitoring program. "We have to determine why it is occurring down there," Sen. Golden said. "And I suggest that be done as soon as possible."

Sullivan said he was "absolutely fed up with this odor. It burns your nose. It's dangerous, potentially lethal, and absurd. " The senator suggested he keep a diary of when the smell occurs, since it does not happen every day at the same time. The health agent noted that the smell tends to dissipate near the dump.

He also noted his average response time from DEQE officials is "not too great," although this time representatives of the Air Quality division responded more quickly.

Sen. Golden explained that DEQE is understaffed, as are many other state agencies. It requires a great deal of active solicitation by town officials before the state responds to a request, he added.

In the meantime, Sullivan said he and his wife wonder each night if they will remain in their home or move.

Water commissioner Ron Goodwin, who has been vocal in his opposition to the landfill operation, said the operators there are taking in close to 300 tons of refuse a day. They are allowed by state assignment a maximum of 100 tons each day. "The board of health has to take a stronger position," Goodwin said. "First there is the issue of whether they have insurance and now this odor, the whole thing is frustrating."

"My position is if this landfill is endangering the health, water, and air, then it should be brought into compliance or shut down. During our last meeting with the landfill owners, I openly questioned their veracity of an insurance policy," Sen. Golden noted.

Goodwin added that at the last health board meeting, special town counsel Michael Leon had not yet received certification of the landfill's closure insurance policy which he believed expired in October.

Later at the selectmen's meeting, Fair Oaks resident Sullivan asked, "Why is the town not monitoring closer? Why are these tests being conducted by the owner of the company? I haven't got any good answers from the board of health. If a rule is broken, somebody should take action."

Town Counsel Richard Henderson said the proper place to address these concerns would be at the health department.

"They are not complying with the rights given to them by the townspeople. They can force them (the landfill owners) to comply with their permits and they're not doing that," Sullivan argued.

Henderson said another recourse would be to ask Atty. Leon why he has not taken injunctive relief on the possibility the landfill is not complying with its permits. Meanwhile, selectmen can request independent court action be taken on the nuisance created by the odor.

Sullivan then stated, "If the governor lived next door those test (conducted by DEQE this week) results would be back tonight. What do I have to do about an odor that is potentially dangerous?"

Henderson replied that the actions against the private landfill have resulted in the most costly engineering and legal expenses in the town's history.

Boys Scouts honor Merle Brown

The Old Colony Council BSA, held its annual District Dinner at Cristo's II in Brockton, Feb. 2. The Council presented six Silver Beaver Awards to the most outstanding members involved in the Boy Scouts of America. This is one of the highest awards presented in scouting. The recipients included Merle S. Brown of Cohasset.

For more than 16 years, Merle S. Brown, Cohasset Troop 28 Scoutmaster, has given leadership to the youth of Cohasset. Four years he served as a Cubmaster for the Cub Pack, then he moved on with the graduating cubs to become an assistant scoutmaster and scoutmaster for a total of 11 years. He followed through the explorer program and served as an Advisor for three years.

After 10 years of leadership positions in the Pack, Troop, and Post, he has been one of the unsung group of workers planning, running activities for all units — the Pinewood Derby, Chairman of Camporee Committee, the Klondike Derby, all as an aid to the unit leaders so that they have a better program for their boys.

Every year this dedicated Scouter has recruited sustaining members to help Scouting reach more supporters for more boys.

He is a hard worker for his church, co-chairman of the Unitarian Church Fair, Sunday School teacher, and Fund Raising Chairman.

The town of Cohasset knows Merle Brown to be one of those dedicated citizens who lend their talents and expertise to the town in various committees and projects. Such as Cohasset Conservation Commission, Cohasset Recycling program, and as a consultant to the selectmen.

He has hosted students from other lands as part of the A.F.S. program.

PARISH NEWS—A special meeting of the Parish is planned for Tuesday, February 10 to discuss the Warner Bros. gift.

MUSIC AND WORSHIP COMMITTEE MEETING—THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5 at 8:00 p.m. in the Parish House.

SCHEDULE CHANGE—PERSPECTIVES, the flexible discussion program for women is hoping to accommodate those who cannot attend on Saturday mornings.

The two February meetings will have the same topic, only one of which will be on a Saturday. The other will be on Sunday afternoon. For best results, come to both. The participants vary considerably from session to session; always there are people who have not met before; always the emphasis is constructive (no gripe sessions). If you have not attended yet, you may be surprised at what a warm, informative experience it can be sharing insights with a group of intelligent, supportive women.

The February dates have been chosed with due regard to the church calendar, the school calendar, Valentine's Day, George Washington's birthday (Feb. 16), the sports schedule, the snow forecast and the astrological signs! There being no conceivable conflicts, please join the group in the Parish House living room: Saturday, February 7, 10 a.m. to noon, Sunday, February 22, 3 to 5 p.m.-"The Challenge of Being Alone".

FREE TAX COUNSELING — for the elderly is available from February 2 to April 15, 1987 at the Unitarian Parish House in Cohasset. The trained volunteers are Mildred Harrington 383-0216 and Betty Van Slyck 383-1561. Please call for an appointment. The AARP sponsors this service.

Second Congregational

PLEASE NOTE: The Trustees request all activities—meetings, girl scouts, cub scouts, brownies, etc., post the day and time on the calendar in Bates Hall. Thank you.

GUEST ORGANIST: Robert Leavitt will be our guest organist while Ellen and Owen Fryling are sunning themselves in St. Vincent!

FAREWELL—Lots of favorable comments and compliments for the several gracious gestures associated with the church's farewell to Doug Wheeler on Sunday, deserving of recognition of those involved and knowledge by the total congregation. At the risk of omitting someone, these included Debbie Anderson for her "thank you" remarks and presentation; Gail Whitehouse, Lee Jenkins, Cheryl Taylor and the children themselves, for their presentation of cards, etc.; Ellen Fryling and the choir for their choral send-off; and DeeDee Perry, Carolyn Blossom and Phyllis Peck for the special coffee reception.

AND HAIL—Many hands made light work of the move-in of the Ritts family Sunday afternoon. But in advance there had been extensive preparation of the parsonage under the direction of the Trustees and a final thoughtful clean-up and stocking of the refrigerator by a group that included Carol Sandblom, Dot Parmenter and Muriel Wheelwright.

IN THE FAMILY—Margaret Dillon is a patient at South Shore Hospital. Congratulations to Esther and Herbert Marsh who celebrated their 30th wedding anniversary on Sunday!!

Doug's address: Rev. Douglas Wheeler, 6 Quincy St., Sharon, MA 02067.

St. Stephen's services

CONFIRMATION RESCHEDULED—Bishop Blanchard will celebrate the Eucharist and confirm four of our members Sunday, Feb. 8, at 10 a.m. Bishop Porteus, who because of illness could not be with us on January 4, is recovering well. Being confirmed will be NaThelle Leddin, Avis Sweeney, Siry Stafford, and Gregory Wallingford.

ORGAN RECITAL OPENS ADULT EDUCATION SERIES—Stephen Lee, our Organist and Choir Director, will offer a recital of organ music on Sunday, February 8, at 3 p.m. to begin a Faith and the Arts series which will feature additionally the Rev. John Gallop showing slides and speaking of how Russian icons embody faith and art on February 22, and a parish-wide arts show on Sunday, March 1.

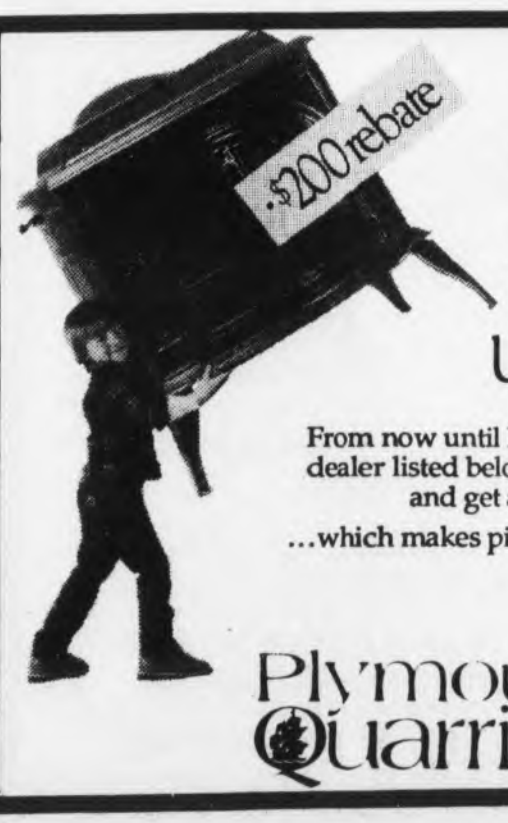
The program of organ music will include three works by J.S. Bach, one of which will be "Savior of the Heather, Come." The setting of the same piece by Dietrich Buxtehude will also be played allowing comparison of his earlier baroque style with that of Bach. In addition, the recital will feature works by Sweelinck, Brahms, Liszt, and Dupre.

Stephen was a finalist at the International Organ Competition in Bruges, Belgium, in 1982 and 1985. The review from his 1985 performance stated that "the air was filled with a super-charged emotionalism that caused the audience to hold its applause several seconds following the conclusion of the final piece, before it burst into thunderous ovation." National Public Radio has broadcast various recitals by Stephen, and Cardinal Records has recorded one of his many Bach programs.

Don't miss Stephen's organ recital on Sunday, February 8, at 3 p.m. here at St. Stephen's.

PLANNING WORKSHOP—The Adult Education Committee will meet Friday, Feb. 6 at 7:30 p.m. with Ed Hyatt from the Center for the Ministry of the Laity to plan our goals for the coming year and organize to best carry them out. The meeting will continue Saturday morning ending at noon.

FELLOWSHIP COMMITTEE—The Fellowship Committee will meet Wednesday, Feb. 11, at 7:30 p.m. We will evaluate our Christmas events and plan our Shrove Tuesday Mardi Gras and Pancake Supper.



PLUSES (AND MINUSES)—We are all aware of positive features of St. Stephen's, and we are aware (sometimes) of the one negative feature, "PARKING."

Therefore, will you refrain from parking directly adjacent to the side entrance steps. When the area is cleared of snow, suitable signs or markings will be established to indicate the area to be kept clear.

Area library communications network debuts

By Kelly Williams
Special to the Mariner

The Old Colony Library Network, which will link up the inventories of 21 South Shore libraries — including Scituate — through a computer, will come on line in the fall.

The project is being accomplished with some $600,000 in state and federal grants as well as contributions from member towns.

"The South Shore is the last area in the state to be computerized," said Marshfield's library director Dennis Corcoran. "It's going to be a big change."

Scituate has budgeted $17,829 for telecommunications equipment for fiscal year 1988, according to Scituate library director Virginia Heffernan.

Last year although the library trustees requested some $22,000 for the computerization project, about $9,000 was approved for the project. In fiscal 1986, the first year, voters appropriated $12,500 for computer terminals and other equipment.

The network is an organization now comprised of 16 libraries on the South Shore. Five more may soon be added which have banded together to upgrade their current library system.

Next month, the network will begin installing UNYSYS computers at the network's central site at Massasoit Community College in Brockton, Corcoran said.

According to Corcoran, the central site will use computers and telecommunication equipment to link all 21 towns into a central electronic card catalogue system. This will enable each town to access nearly two million items in recorded reference material from all the combined libraries.

Corcoran said computer terminals in each library will give residents a chance to gain quick access to reference information on any book in any of the 21 libraries, eliminating the need for a manual card catalogues.

He said the computer will instantly tell what books are available in each library, thereby creating a faster inter-library loan system.

Inter-library loans would only take two or three days with the new system, compared to the present two-week to six month wait.

In addition to Scituate and Marshfield, libraries in Canton, Duxbury, Plymouth, Norwell, Stoughton, Quincy, Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Rockland, Milton, Sharon and Abington and Walpole are part of the Old Colony Library Network.

Five other towns — Avon, Hull, Randolph, Holbrook and Weymouth — have asked to join the network and are requesting funds at their town meetings.

The project began in 1985 when several libraries decided to find a way to share information. They approached the state for funding but were refused.

Corcoran said the state wanted them to prove their seriousness about the project. So Corcoran approached town Administrator Rick Agnew and Marshfield voters last year.

Marshfield appropriated $20,000 in 1986 for the network and is proposing another $20,000 at their spring town meeting. They also agreed to be the fiscal agent to receive the grants for the network.

According to Corcoran, treasurer of the network, the project received $400,000 from the Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA), a federal library improvement grant, for the purchase of the central computer.

Another $100,000 was granted to the network by the state's East Massachusetts Regional Library System to buy software and hardware programs for the computer system.

Corcoran said the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissions made available a $150,000 LSCA grant for the upgrading of the five towns entering the network.

He said the grants are part of the state's plan to have all of Massachusetts libraries under one central information system within the next two years.

After reviewing other networks in the area, such as Minuteman, Noble, Merimack Valley, and Central/Western, the 21 Old Colony network representatives decided last June to go with the second largest computer company in the world, UNYSYS, formerly the Sperry Corp. They also enlisted the help of a library software application company in Alabama called Sirsi, Corcoran said.

He said when the UNYSYS system is installed next month, the library staff will begin the tedious task of data conversion.

All the written reference material must be turned into machine - readable language and stored on floppy disks. Once completed, the networks data base will contain more information than stored in the Library of Congress.

Corcoran said their system of checkouts will use lasers to read bar codes on the books, similar to the present checkout stand system at shopping markets. This will do away with the manual process of stamping due dates and card filing.

"It's going to be a lot of work," he said, "But we hope to have the whole system on line in 18 months. If we don't I will be very disappointed.

Corcoran said the network is currently looking for bids for a company to change the present library cards to a plastic card with magnetic tape and bar codes.

An Old Colony network member then will be able to use the card at any of the 21 libraries in the network.

He said Marshfield should have four access terminals installed and ready for the public by the end of next fall.

But the membership in the network is not free. Each town must pay an annual membership fee which pays for the system's maintenance and payroll for network employees.

The fee is based on the circulation of the town's library, and the computer terminal usage. The fee is added to the library's operational budget and must be approved at the annual town meetings.

Corcoran said Marshfield paid just under $11,000 in network membership fees this year and can expect higher fees in the future.

"The cost will go up. It's definitely not going to go down," he said, "but that's the price of technology."

Panic Disorder: a matter of mind and body

By Stephen M. Stillman, M.A., Ph.D
Psychologist
Special to the Mariner

Are you S.A.D.? By this I mean do you experience feelings of stress, anxiety, and depression?

The movies, television, and commercials often portray people who are perpetually happy with hardly a care in the world. Their frozen smiles and enviable lifestyles create false expectations for the rest of us who do not have such perfect lives and situations. These false images in their own right can provoke feelings of inadequacy which promote stress, anxiety, and depression.

The point is this: in the real world there is no perfection, and therefore, at times it is perfectly normal to experience feelings of stress, anxiety, and depression, to some extent. To answer the original question, most, or probably all of us, have experienced these feelings. Such feelings serve a utilitarian purpose where they signal that something is not right with us or with our environment.

Similarly, physical symptoms such as pain, fever, fatigue, headaches, a racing heartbeat, or stomach aches may signal that there is something wrong with one or more systems of our bodies.

Of all the emotional disorders which have a strong physical symptom complex, there exists a devastating anxiety condition known popularly as Panic Disorder. It has only been in recent years that we have come to understand what this disorder is about. This condition has proved to be terribly disabling.

Without warning or in the presence of feared situations and settings, individuals are overwhelmed with feelings of severe anxiety, dread, panic, fears of death, spells of dizziness, and disorientation. Other symptoms include heart palpitations, tingling or numbness to the hands or feet, ringing in the ears, and a feeling that one is losing control, or even going "crazy."

In the past, and even now, sufferers of these symptoms have gone from doctor to doctor to be examined for every possible disease, finding that they are in good physical health.

Often such people are labeled as hypochondriacs by the clinician, and their families. The fact is, they suffer from endogenous anxiety, a condition which has a strong biological component, and an equally profound psychological profile.

Having successfully treated many such patients, I am pleased to report that effective treatment is available. While each patient is treated individually and specifically to his-her condition the usual course of treatment consists of counseling/psychotherapy designed to precisely address the disorder; as well as the administration of medication, when necessary, in conjunction with a physician who is knowledgeable about such medication.

The matter becomes particularly complicated when we come to realize that emotional symptoms are not only a matter of mind, but a matter of body, as well. Likewise, symptoms of the body can also be a matter of mind. If this were not enough, both emotional (mental) and physical symptoms usually occur simultaneously.

An example or two will serve to clarify what I have just said. Emotional discomfort can be a matter of body as well as a matter of mind when as a result of experiencing a divorce one simultaneously experiences discomfort such as headaches or stomach aches. Another example would be: you are interviewing for a new job, and before entering the interviewer's office you feel dizzy and sick to your stomach.

Both of the above examples represent usual and expected responses to stressful situations. In the first example, however, there is a likelihood that the person experiencing these mind-body feelings could benefit from therapy administered by a mental health professional. This would not be likely in the second case excepting a situation where emotional and physical responses prevented an individual from successfully completing an interview.

An example of emotional discomfort (symptoms) caused by a physical condition can be seen in the example of individuals who have major physical disorders, i.e., heart disease, colitis, migraines, and hypertension (high blood pressure).

A patient's concern about his or her physical disorder can lead to feelings of severe depression and anxiety; both of which are stress producing on the body as well as the mind.

The bottom line is this: the mind and body are meant to work together. Despite this, many people experience physical symptoms associated with stressful or emotionally taxing situations and conditions.

As a psychologist in private practice, I have come to specialize in a relatively new area of mental health called Behavioral Medicine. Clinicians in this speciality treat all forms of emotional disorders but are particularly trained to treat those disorders which have a strong somatic (physical) component.

Behavioral Medicine includes the treatment of major and minor anxiety disorders, panic disorders, phobias, emotional components of physical disease, eating disorders, addictive disorders, stress and its physical and emotional components, sleep disorders, and depression.

As a clinician, I am particularly frustrated by the fact that there are so many people who are suffering in silence. There need not be shame, either in having an emotional-physical problem or in seeking help.

For further information please feel free to call the counseling services of Associates of Behavioral Medicine through an answering service or 826-5821.

Area nursing group helps meet demand for home care

By Joan Hand
Special to the Mariner

Health and Fitness

There is no question that home care is the wave of the future. Traditionally, it is the oldest form of health care. And now, it is the newest. Modern technology has developed to the point that many services in the hospital can now be provided at home. And there is significant evidence showing that it is often less costly, more effective, and more satisfying, both for the person who is ill and the family caring for them. There is a growing demand for health care services that are available in the home. The Visiting Nurse Association of the South Shore is meeting that demand.

In response to increasing needs and requests, VNA services are now provided in eleven communities by a larger, consolidated not-for-profit organization that in 1983 underwent corporate reorganization to better meet the demands of the changing health care delivery market. This new organization, the VNA Foundation of the South Shore, Inc., encompasses:

—Visiting Nurse Association of the South Shore, Inc.

—Hospice of the South Shore, Inc. and —Home and Health Resources of the South Shore, Inc.

The combined agencies share offices at Braintree Five Corners, with a VNA branch office in the Cushing Center in Norwell serving the Coastal area. The Foundation itself is the "parent" organization which provides financial and planning direction for the three home care agencies.

The VNA has a distinguished history on the South Shore. In the spirit of community philanthropy, the Braintree Visiting Nurse Association (originally called the Braintree Friendly Aid Society) was formed in 1911. Similar organizations served most communities in the area until the demand for expanded services and changes in the system of funding health care led several individual visiting nurse associations to conclude that a larger consolidated organization was needed.

To this end, in the late 1970's and early 1900's, the Braintree VNA, through a series of mergers and acquisitions, formally linked agencies in Weymouth, Randolph, Holbrook, Scituate, Cohasset and Braintree to form the Visiting Nurse Association of the South Shore, Inc.

A Hospice program for the terminally ill was begun in 1980 and the Quincy based Homemaker Services of the South Shore merged in the same year. The combined agencies now provide services to eleven communities on the South Shore: Braintree, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate, Weymouth.

The VNA agencies maintain the proud tradition of community service that led to the founding of the original VNA. On the Board of Directors and committees of the Foundation and its affiliates sit many community, business and health professionals.They volunteer valuable time and expertise to direct VNA operations, representing a broad spectrum of viewpoints.

According to George B. Laban, Chief Executive Officer of the Visiting Nurse Association of the South Shore, local visiting nurse organizations are responding to the increased need for prompt, intensive follow-up care for more patients nowadays. "We are routinely seeing patients sent home in more serious condition than used to be the case," said Laban. "At the same time, the VNA of the South Shore has had plenty of experience during our 75 years of giving acute care at home, and we're able to do much more now in the patient's home with the new technologies."

Each patient is admitted for VNA care by a Registered Nurse or Therapist who works out a tailor-made plan of care and coordinates that care with the instructions of a primary physician and other health care professionals.

The VNA of the South Shore health care team may include: professional nurses, physical therapist, occupational therapist, speech therapist, respiratory therapist, medical social worker, home health aide, homemaker, pastoral counselor and nutritional counselor. Teams work routinely with patients who are on I.V. therapy, on ventillator care, or who need daily wound care or special injections and medications.

For supportive home services, there's Home and Health Resources of the South Shore, Inc., VNA's newest affiliate. They can offer Homemakers and Personal Care Aides to assist with personal needs, light housekeeping, errands, meal preparation or companionship. For those who would like continuous, skilled nursing, they have private nurses available for home or hospital care.

Complex medical treatments can be delivered at home because the VNASSI team provides assessment and planning, consultation and teaching to support both the patient and family members.

The key, said Laban, is careful planning for continuity of care. The visiting nurse working with the patient's doctor can ensure that the right people and equipment are at the home as early as needed. An assessment visit by the VNA nurse sets this case management process in motion.

After surgery or illness, few people are in the mood for complicated research and hours of telephone calls to set up care for their return home. In the hospital the discharge planning department or a nurse will generally assist patients in arranging for home care. But the choice of which home health agency will come into the home should be up to the patient or family members. The VNA of the South Shore has become far and away the largest home health agency on the South Shore by delivering the highest quality, most accessible and comprehensive services and being responsive to physician, hospital, and patient needs.

Anyone who expects to need home care should ask his or her personal physician for a recommendation of home health care agencies. The VNA of the South Shore, Inc., recommends that anyone, particularly the elderly patient, who needs home health care after hospitalization should select an independent, non-profit, full-service agency and ask for the VNA of the South Shore by name.

The hospital discharge department is obligated to offer a choice of home care agencies to the patient. The patient has a right to choose the particular agency of their preference. If the patient merely asks for "a visiting nurse" without designating a chosen agency by name, he or she may be surprised to find that another agency has been assigned to the case. It is advisable, therefore, to ask for the VNA or the preferred agency by name.

For more information on obtaining home health care services, contact the VNA of the South Shore, Inc., at 849-1710 or our Coastal Office in Norwell at 659-4940.

Skiers should remember muscle exercises

Now that the snow conditions are improving, South Shore skiiers are heading for the slopes by the dozen.

Now is the time for skiers to pay closer attention to muscle flexibility for injury prevention.

A few minutes each day devoted to muscle stretching can keep a ski vacation from being spoiled by a painful muscle strain.

The most important stretches are for the calf muscles, the quadriceps (front of thigh), and the hamstrings (back of thigh).

Calf stretch: stand facing wall two to three feet away. Keep heels on floor and lean toward wall.

Quadricep stretch: stand, bend knee, grasp ankle behind and draw heel toward buttocks.

Hamstring stretch: sit with one leg straight out on couch, hold knee flat and lean toward leg.

All the stretches should be done slowly, gently, and in a prolonged fashion without causing pain.

Health & Fitness

You should stretch at least once daily.

Don't forget the stress placed upon the lower back during skiing. To stretch the lower lumbar muscles, lie on your back and draw the knees toward the chest alternately five times and together five times.

Other ways to prevent ski injuries are quadricep strengthening and aerobic exercise. Today's ski boots place additional stress on the knee ligaments, and strong quads are important for knee stability and protection.

This can be accomplished by knee extension exercises with ankle weights, or by using various weight training devices in the gym. Many injuries occur later in the day as the skiier becomes tired.

Good cardiovascular fitness from indoor cycling or aerobic classes will reduce afternoon fatigue.

Use your first ski run as a "warm-up" by skiing conservatively. This gives you a chance to check and adjust your equipment, and it gives your muscles a chance to prepare for the vigorous day of skiing ahead.

Finally, if you do suffer a skiing injury, be sure to consult the sports medicine team of physician and physical therapist. The physician can rule out possible fractures, and the physical therapist can help reduce discomfort and speed the recovery from a musculoskeletal injury.

County Big Brother group plans bowling fundraiser

The Plymouth County Branch of the Big Brother Association of Boston is preparing for it's annual fundraiser, "Bowl for Kids Sake."

This year's goal is to raise $10,000 to help provide friendship for father-absent boys, seven to 13 years old.

This year's event has been expanded. Bowling leagues from both Maple Alleys in Brockton and the Hanover Bowladrome will be asked to bowl for the Big Brother Association.

From Feb. 8 to Feb. 14, league bowlers from the two bowling houses who have taken pledge sheets, and gotten sponsors, will be bowling to help support the agency. Last year league bowlers at Maple Alleys raised over $5000.

Overall prize for the league bowler from each bowling house who raises the most money will be a $500 gift certificate to Eastern airlines.

The second half of "Bowl for Kids Sake" is Community Day, which will be held at Maple Alleys in Brockton Saturday, March 14 from 1 to 5 p.m.

Bowlers from any Plymouth County town, who have received pledge sheets and are sponsored, may come in individually or in teams of four for friendly competition among themselves and to try for the prizes. The Community Day bowler who raises the most money will also receive a $500 Eastern airlines gift certificate.

'Memoirs' is touching and humorous

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

Neil Simon has a well-known talent for telling a touching story with both humor and insight. That gift shines best in his award-winning autobiographical comedy, Brighton Beach Memoirs, now playing with a professional cast of able actors through Feb. 8 at the South Shore Performing Arts Center in Stoughton.

Starring Joyce Van Patten and Glenn Scarpelli, Brighton Beach Memoirs offers a well-constructed, nostalgic view of Simon's adolescence and coming of age.

Fifteen-year-old Eugene Morris Jerome, the Simon character, is going to be a writer when he grows up, but only if the Yankees and the Red Sox don't draft him.

Anticipating his future career, Eugene writes his "memoirs" in an old notebook. Moving in and out of the action on stage, Eugene is both a participant and an observer who speaks directly to the audience. He is the Greek chorus who comments on the characters, their actions, and the implications of those actions.

Eugene's descriptions of his working class Jewish family of Brooklyn, New York in the 1930s go beyond the confines of the Jerome household. The characters and situations are both specific and universal.

Eugene's maternal Aunt Blanche (Annette Miller) and her two daughters, frail Laurie (Devon Sorvari) and the intriguing sixteen-year-old Nora (Sharon Harwood) live with the Jeromes after an unmentionable tragedy took the life of Aunt Blanche's husband.

In some of the most touching and amusing scenes of the evening, Eugene (Mr. Scarpelli) turns to his older brother Stanley (Wayne Daniels) with questions about girls and all the mixed-up emotions he is trying to sort out.

Eugene doesn't understand why he can't stop imagining his cousin Nora undressed. Until Stanley sets him straight, Eugene is convinced he's the only boy in the world who has fantasies about the opposite sex.

Mr. Scarpelli appears to capture the essence of Eugene's exasperation and his matter-of-fact outlook, but his physicalization of the character is a frenetic cross between Martin Short, Jerry Lewis, and Groucho Marx. Swift footed, twisted maneuvers suggest a cartoon figure who stands apart from the more realistic style of the rest of the cast. Whether the choice is Mr. Scarpelli's or director John Going's is unclear.

The National Theatre Group, Inc. opened its first season of a celebrity Broadway series with Neil Simon's hit, Brighton Beach Memoirs at the South Shore Performing Arts Center. Pictured above is Joyce Van Patten as Kate and Glenn Scarpelli as Eugene.

The difference in acting styles is most apparent in the scenes with Eugene and his mother Kate (Ms. Van Patten). Joyce Van Patten's performance is natural and steady, even when she is stressed and pushed to her limit by her ever demanding household.

Brighton Beach Memoirs is more than a humorous trip down memory lane. Beneath the comical interchanges lie serious questions about unresolved relationships, values, and choices.

With the underlying expectation of oncoming war, the tension is underscored.

We, the audience, can't help but bring to the theatre what we know about the impending Holocaust. When Jack Jerome (Jay Blitzman) reads his nightly newspaper and wonders about the fate of his Jewish relatives who cannot leave Hitler's Europe, we relaize the world's innocence, not just Eugene's is coming to an end.

Memoirs is the first of Mr. Simon's autobiographical trilogy that includes Biloxi Blues and Broadway Bound. It is produced here by the National Theatre Group Inc. which plans to bring three more shows with "name" actors to Stoughton later this year.

March 31, Adrienne Barbeau will star in the musical Best Little Whorehouse in Texas. The show will run through April 12.

Later in the season, James Whitmore and Audra Lindley will star in On Golden Pond. The third show is under negotiation.

The South Shore Performing Arts Center is located at 807 Washington Street, Stoughton Center.

The Dragon's Dungeon — by Claire McDonough

The stars don't compel but they can repel

With Valentine's Day approaching, most columnists offer advice for enticing the object of your affection into an amorous relationship, right? Well, it occurred to Madame Zolar that some people have the opposite problem. Have you ever, for example, been pursued by a Scorpio whose dogged attentions interfere with your persuit of a Leo? Tragic.

So she summoned me to her chic little ashram on Third Cliff and offered the following advice for those of you who would deter romantic advances. Just be absolutely certain, before you follow this advice, that you really and irrevocably want to deter.

ARIES (March 21 - April 20): Tell your Aries that the thing you most admire about him or her is a willingness to take direction. Say that you foresee a long, satisfying relationship with you making all the decisions. Carry a picture of Allan Alda in your wallet. Don't expect to ever see your Aries again.

TAURUS (April 21 - May 21): Tell your Taurus that you are really into sharing, and that you are anxious for a relationship with someone who is willing to endow you with all his worldly goods. Complete with power of attorney.

CANCER (June 22 - July 23): Tell Cancer that you should enter a personal improvement program together. Suggest a diet that allows you to eat all you want of everything you don't like. In really serious situations, you may only eat things you absolutely loathe. Add that you will both exercise strenuously. Your Cancer will begin running immediately. In the opposite direction.

LEO (July 24 - Aug. 23): Tell Leo there are only three things you can't stand: gold jewelry, Cadillac automobiles, and the people who buy them. Add that the only thing more gauche than a Cadillac is a Rolls Royce, and that you consider television's Mr. T to be tasteless and ostentatious. He won't know what you're talking about, but he will conclude that you lack the perception to appreciate him.

VIRGO (Aug. 24 - Sept. 23): Visit Virgo's home. Drop your coat on the floor. Drop your cigarette ashes in a vase. Drop your coffee cup on the carpet. Then drop out of sight. Virgos have been known to murder for less.

LIBRA (Sept. 24 - Oct. 23): Libras are terribly hard to get rid of, because they tend to love everybody. (This can be a real problem to the local police.) You might try muttering darkly that in general you oppose capital punishment, but you could make an exception for people who vacillate. Add that the only disagreement you ever had with your former spouse was over the permanency of relationships. Mention that the funeral was lovely.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22): Scorps are big on suspense, mystery, glamor. If one is getting a little too close for your comfort, mention that your ambition in life is to be a contestant on "The Newlywed Game" so you can share your most intimate secrets with the entire world.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23 - Dec. 21): If you want to discourage a Sagittarius, wait till he's whispering romantic suggestions in your ear. Interrupt him to point out that his tie is crooked. Suggest that his shirt doesn't go with his jacket. Then ask him what he was saying.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20): Capricorns firmly believe that ambition is next to godliness and humility is next to impossible. Tell your Capricorn that you feel strongly that the corporate structure is corrupt and that you'd both be more happy in a commune. Paint a peace sign on your left cheek and wear a purple poncho.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 - Feb. 1): If you're trying to dump an Aquarian, do not, repeat, do not follow the advice for getting rid of a Capricorn. Aquarians the world over would beat an offbeat path to your door. Tell the Aquarian that you are turned on by three piece suits, attache cases, and Ashley from "Gone With the Wind."

PISCES (Feb. 20 - March 20): Most Pisceans go through life firm in the belief that happiness is greatly over-rated. They are quick to point out that it was Patrick Bronte, father of Emily and Charlotte, who said, "Where there's life there's hope," and that these were his last words. Tell your Pisces that the two people you most admire are the author of "I'm O.K.; You're O.K." and Richard Dawson.

NOTE TO ALL SIGNS: Ignore any advice you are given by a Sun Sign astrologer who writes for a local newspaper. Her idea of success is to have a peace sign painted on her left cheek and to wear a purple poncho.

Hawaiian cuisine is a tasty mid-winter diversion

Part of the fun of vacationing is sampling the native fare. Island favorites are found in the "Aloha" recipe book that Ruth and Jack Lawrence brought me from Hawaii and, while I think I'd pass up the Lomi Lomi Salmon (raw, kneaded fish) and the Kalua Pig (an entire pig steamed in a pit), a luau surely sounds like fun.

Long ago, native luaus lasted several days, attracting hundreds of guests who ate a bit, danced a little and sang a lot. Some snowy weekend, it might be fun to "go native" by inviting in a few friends, sitting on the floor, eating such delights as tropical baked bananas, pineapple dementhe, Hawaiian beef jerky, ginger orange muffins and this

3/4 C. chopped macadamia nuts or slivered almonds

Sprinkle salt and pepper on fillets. Baste with juice. Let fish stand for 15 min. Preheat oven to 350. Grease shallow baking pan. Mix together mayo and soy sauce. Spread over fish. Combine crumbs and nuts. Roll fish in crumb mixture. place in pan and bake for 25 to 30 min. Serves six.

When the snow falls outside and storms rage in the dead of winter, cabin fever is apt to set in. Just getting out for a breath of air makes a welcome break and for those having access to our rivers and beaches, a visit at low tide sometimes offers a meal that can be a gourmet treat. With screwdriver in hand, pry some mussels loose from the rocks or old pilings.

Europeans regard them with as much admiration as we do clams and scallops, yet we tend to ignore them. No license is needed, so we can just help ourselves from the beds of the tidal flats. This appetizer is from Sarah Hurlburt's mussel cookbook. It can be made days ahead, covered with foil, then frozen.

24 mussels
1/2 C. softened butter
1 T. ea. chopped parsley and lemon juice
1 shallot
3 large cloves garlic, pureed
1 slice raw bacon, minced
Salt and pepper

Steam well-scrubbed and bearded mussels until they open. Save half a shell for each mussel. Blend remaining ingredients thoroughly. Put small amount of the herbed butter in each shell. Lay mussel on it. Cover with more of the butter and place in shallow pans. Heat oven to 400 degrees and bake for 15 to 20 min. Serves four while sizzling!

If ever there was a time to take up a new hobby it is now, in the dead of winter. Joan Smoot's cooking lessons sound so appealing in the brochure she sent me that some of us would galdly while away the next four months by enrolling in her courses in cooking called Culinary Adventures. Joan lives in Norwell and is owner of the Foxglove restaurant at the junction of Rte. 53 and 139 on the Hanover-Pembroke line.

Cooking demonstrations and techniques will be offered by this cleaver young author and lecturer in many facets of cooking: Chinese, Italian, French Provincial, New Orleans, and much, much more, including souffles, desserts, entrees and Feb. 18 at 10 or Feb. 19 at the same time: "Microwave Magic." Reservations may be made by phone and perhaps you will see Joan prepare her

☐ When a grammarian told Winston Churchill not to end a sentence with a prepositon he said, "This is an indisposition up with which I will not put." But Johnny went too far when he wrote, "What did you give me that book to read out of from for??"

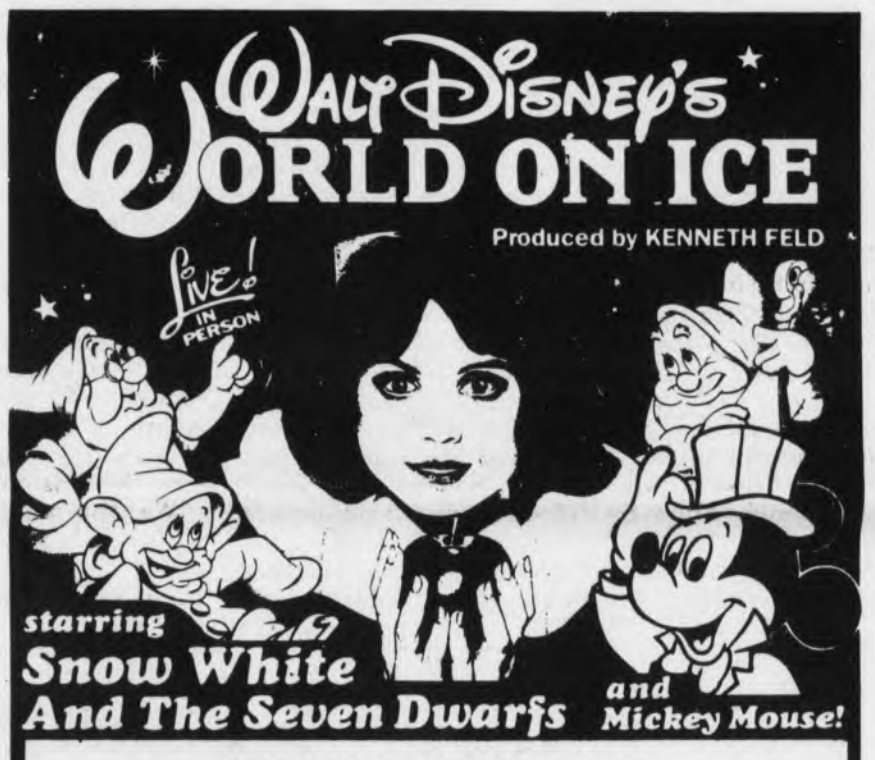
☐ Want to make a fortune? Start a newspaper column listing "lost leaders" in supermarkets. You know, buy your tuna fish here, the mayonnaise there, the hot dogs there, the mustard here.

☐ Incidentially, newspapers command a larger share of advertising dollars in the U.S. than television, radio, billboards and magazines combined.

☐ Adolescents need room, board and a few rules. Someone said, "Don't make life too pleasant. They may never want to leave."

☐ Many years ago in a syndicated quiz column I said water drains clockwise out of a bowl in the Northern Hemisphere, counter-clockwise in the South Hemisphere. In Brazil I tested that theory and found water there also drained clockwise. Yet, nobody apparently ever told the American Magazine of my error after the quiz appeared.

☐ French Impressionist Paul Cezanne was such a slow worker that he was forced to use wax fruit in his still-life paintings, since real fruit would often rot before he was finished.



☐ Music may do more than soothe the savage breast. It may, like Chopin's, induce jealously. It may be intellectual like Brahms's or therapeutic like Bach's. If Beethoven's Quartet in C Sharp Minor makes you cry, the closing movement of his unbuttoned symphonies make you exult. To enhance that feeling of conquest, get an earful of Wagner.

☐ Job's turkey was so poor it had to lean against a fence to gobble.

At the South Shore Science Center . . .

Do your kids need to get out of the house? Bring them over to the Science Center, Jacobs Lane, Norwell, for the following fascinating programs.

PEDDOCKS ISLAND TRIP

What Fun! Take a warm harbor cruise to Peddocks Island where you'll tour Fort Andrews. You'll use a map on a scavenger hunt, take a hike with the island caretaker and participate in other environmental activities. Dress warmly and bring lunch. Boat trip costs are included. Meet at Hewitt's Cove in Hingham at 8:15 a.m. Directions are available at registration and permission slips are required. Sandra Palmer, Naturalist and Science Center staff will be supervising the group. Wednesday, Feb. 18, from 8:15 a.m. to 5 p.m. Children must be at least 8 years old. Prepaid registration required (members/$20; non-members/$23). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

TIME MACHINE

Imagine being in a time machine! You will travel to the past to see prehistoric animals and learn about what they ate and how they traveled. Then the time machine will take you to visit creatures of the 20th century. How are these animals alike and different? With Marshall Katler, Naturalist and Bruce Luscombe, Fossil Hunter. Monday, Feb. 16 and Tuesday, Feb. 17, from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Bring lunch both days and dress appropriately for outside activities. Ages: 8-12 years. Prepaid registration required (members/$25; non-members/$30). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

COLONIAL LIVING

Spend two days in colonial times. You'll prepare foods, make toys, hike and track animals and make candles just like colonial people did. Different activities will take place each day. Children must be at least 7 years old. With Sandra Palmer and Jennifer Beaven, Naturalists. Thursday, Feb. 19 and Friday, Feb. 20 from 9:30 to 2 p.m. Prepaid registration required (members/$28; non-members/$32). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

FIRST EARTH ORBIT

Take a look back on this anniversary of John Glenn's historic orbit of our earth. His perspective changed the way we see our planet. Then, view the stars through the Astronomical Society telescope. Bring the whole family and join Rolf Egon, President, South Shore Astronomical Society. Friday, Feb. 20 from 8 to 10 p.m. Prepaid registration required (members/$4; non-members/$5). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

South Shore Natural Science Center is on Jacobs Lane, Norwell, and is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Sundays and most holidays. Trails, exhibits, library and gift shop. Free admission.

Retired Persons group offers free income tax advice

Free income tax advice is available for Marshfield area residents through the tax aide program of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP).

The program started Tuesday.

Volunteer counselors trained by the Internal Revenue Service will operate at the Council on Aging in the Ventress Memorial Library, from 8:30 to 11 a.m., Tuesdays through Fridays now through April 15.

Edward Corea, coordinator for the tax program for Plymouth County, said the service is designed to help older persons understand income tax forms and become familiar with special benefits available to older persons.

"Our counselors, many of whom are retired business people with experience in tax matters, are trained to prepare returns for older taxpayers," Corea said.

According to Corea, past experience has indicated that many older persons are unaware of special benefits they are entitled to claim. Some may not be required to file a return because of limited income.

Persons using the service should bring with them copies of their previous year's federal and state tax returns and forms for the current tax year, including W-2's and other relevant materials showing income for the year.

For further information, call the Council on Aging at 834-8781. In other towns, residents should call their local councils of aging.

Studds moves office

U.S. Rep. Gerry E. Studds has moved his office on the South Shore to a "new and far more convenient" location in Pembroke.

Effective Feb. 2, the new address of the Congressman's South Shore office is: Barstow's Landing, Suite 6, Two Columbia Road (Route 53), Pembroke, MA 02359.

The new office is situated in a large, colonial-style office building on Route 53 overlooking the North River, which forms the border between Pembroke and Hanover.

The telephone number of the South Shore office will remain (617) 826-3866. The new office has an access for the handicapped.

"The most important part of my official duties is to be as accessible as possible to the residents of the Tenth Congressional District," Studds said. "I think that our new Pembroke office will be easier to find, and easier to get to for most residents of the South Shore."

Federal tax guide available from Cong. Studds

U.S. Rep. Gerry E. Studds (D-MA) has available copies of a guide to 1987 federal taxes for senior citizens in southeastern Massachusetts.

The four-page guide, compiled by the Select Congressional Committee on Aging, outlines, many complicated and confusing sections of federal tax forms which are of importance to seniors, and offers guidance on a variety of related questions. It is available free of charge through Studds' offices.

The guide is intended to be "an informative, no-nonsense discussion of tax provisions of particular significance to older Americans," Studds said.

The guide, as well as a more detailed, 18-page tax booklet, may be obtained through Studds' offices in Hanover (826-3866), Hyannis (771-0666) or New Bedford (999-1251).

Studds has also distributed copies of the tax guide to local Councils on Aging.

Early landfill samples show nothing harmful

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It may be a nuisance. Or the odor in the area of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill may be more serious.

Prompted by complaints from local residents, state officials conducted air samplings at the landfill last week. "Very preliminary" results indicate there are no harmful odors at the landfill, state officials said. But the complete results will not be ready until next week.

Tom McGrath, air pollution engineer for the Air Quality Division of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) said this week that air samplings thus far indicate "nothing relevant." The preliminary test results were prepared from air samples taken by the fire department Saturday night at the landfill, and those taken last Monday, Feb. 2 by DEQE.

"We'll be running more detailed tests on the two samples and they should be ready by next week," he stated. The unpleasant odors which seem to eminate from the commercial landfill area, were not present when DEQE took the sampling Feb. 2.

The fire department conducted the same test Saturday night after receiving several complaints about the odor. Fire Chief Daniel Brock said the test consists of a sampling tube and a pump. Air is pumped through the tube and chemicals are taken from the air to be sampled. The fire chief was not present during Saturday night's sampling which was supervised by Capt. Silvia.

One of the more vocal complainants is a new neighbor to Fair Oaks Lane. Michael Sullivan and his family moved to the residential neighborhood from Hingham in July. They were unaware of the controversy surrounding the commercial landfill off Crocker Lane, but soon became acquainted with its proximity to his new home.

He selected his new home based on its size, the neighborhood, and because the builder had an excellent reputation. "We came here," Sullivan said, "with the intentions of staying here a long time. We checked into the school system, and called people we knew who would be familiar with that. We have two children and we were very interested in Cohasset's school system."

Esthetically, Sullivan commented, the neighborhood was very pleasing. But in October, he began noticing a strange and unpleasant odor lingering in his yard and along his property at the rear of the Fair Oaks circle. Although he thought it was a "fluke" smell, he began to notice it almost every night as he drove home from his business in Hingham. Along Rte. 3A just prior to Crocker Lane, Sullivan would begin to smell the disturbing scent.

Local group has a keen watch on landfill

Although it is only preliminary, there's a new group in town that is keeping a close watch on environmental issues affecting Cohasset. And Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill is their top priority.

Brian Lipsett will be talking to the health board tonight, Feb. 12, to discuss the agreement signed in May between the town and the operators of the privately-owned commercial landfill.

"We want to question the board of health on whether they are enforcing the May 5 site amendment," the Pond Street resident said.

Questions he will want answered include whether the landfill operators have submitted a closure plan with the proposed costs. "I want to know what their financial plans are for the future operation and closure of the landfill," he explained.

Lipsett, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, initially became involved in organizational efforts while attending college in Maine. "A friend once lived next door to a hazardous waste dump and knew how to set up an organization in that state to monitor the toxic waste issue. We later organized such a group in Maine called Maine's People Alliance, which later merged with a national organization."

Lipsett's primary concern back home is that the Cohasset Heights landfill is located within the town's watershed. All landfills, he commented, tend at one time to "turn up toxic wastes," whether from commercial or household dumpers. The problem with Cohasset Heights, he said, is that the under drain reaches the Great Swamp outlet.

"I think this is a community issue," he said this week, explaining that the group is not yet organized, with five or six members expressing a strong interest in forming an alliance. "I also think the Board of Health could be more responsive in finding out how concerned the public really is about CHL. The question is, if the Board of Health does not enforce their own decision, how do they expect CHL to take these permit

Rte 3A future traffic to determine 'super' market fate

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

If a proposed supermarket is constructed in Cohasset, local residents will be in store for traffic troubles.

According to traffic engineer Walter Freeman, volume will increase on Route 3A and its side streets, and some intersections along the highway will be clogged if a Super Stop & Shop is built at the corner of Route 3A and Sohier Street.

Freeman's traffic study may be the last hurdle developer Donald Staszko must jump before he is allowed to build the supermarket. However, neither Staszko nor his attorney Charles Humphreys was present for the engineer's presentation to the planning board, Feb. 4.

Furthermore, Humphreys said he could not comment on the study, because he had not read it.

In his presentation, Freeman noted Beechwood Street and the southerly side of King Street would be most adversely affected by the diversions of traffic, which would result from the created congestion.

In the draft report Freeman presented to the board, he noted, the proposed supermarket would generate approximately 3,600 "new vehicle trips" in the Cohasset area during an average weekday, and as many as 4,300 more trips on Saturday.

At the supermarket driveway, which would be located opposite King Street, he said,"Vehicles waiting to turn left onto Route 3A will experience very long delays, similar to those experienced at Sohier Street in the summer."

Freeman commented, the Sohier Street-Route 3A intersection already gets an "F" on the intersection report card, with nearly 10-minute delays for cars waiting to turn at rush hour. With the shopping center there, those delays would lengthen to more than a half-hour.

"I could have lunch in that period," quipped Christine Bassett, board chairman. "The town owns some land there; maybe we could make a little park and put up some picnic tables."

The relatively high volume of driveway traffic emanating from the new supermarket, Freeman noted, could result in a safety problem, unless a traffic signal is added in the vicinity of the driveway.

While a red light would have cars turning right, down King Street, he said, widening the road and adding another lane on Route 3A there, would help to deter that effect somewhat.

The board expressed concern regarding the potential impact on "bucolic" King Street. A crossroad would be created if plans to place the plaza's driveway directly across the highway are realized.

"The large expected increase in afternoon traffic on King Street south of the proposed Cohasset Plaza," Freeman said, "is likely to make walking along that street more hazardous, especially considering King Street is a school bus route."

Freeman made his predictions of future traffic and traffic related to the proposed supermarket "by using existing and projected future land use in the surrounding communities and its traffic generating characteristics, and assigning that traffic to the roadway system in the area by use of a computer traffic assignment model."

Cohasset's week . . .

More state aid coming

Cohasset may be receiving an additional $82,568 in state aid, State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray announced Tuesday.

This amount brings the total returned to the town to more than $1.3 million dollars.

Murray said the money will go into the town's general fund, and is not ear-marked for any specific use.

She explained over $27,000 of the increase comes from the state lottery, while the balance is in resolution aid to cities and towns.

Resolution aid is figured on the "need formula," to make up the difference between local costs and local revenue.

While she is pleased that her constituent towns will receive the funds, Murray said, "I have a problem with this since these towns have always been fiscally responsible."

By using these formulas, responsible towns are penalized because their local governments work well, she said, addding the towns in her district, Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset should have received more.

Murray added that she has co-sponsored a bill that if passed would make the state "cherry sheets" available to the towns on a quarterly basis, to enable them to better plan their budgets.

'Bullet' voting changes

The call of politicians and peacemakers used to be, "ballots not bullets." In Cohasset, the selectmen now are calling for "bullet voting."

Town counsel presently is reviewing a selectmen sponsored warrant article, which would change the way Cohasset chooses its executive board members.

If the selectmen are successful in amending the bylaw, future candidates will have to choose which seat they are running for, they must choose their incumbent opponents.

At present, the top two vote-getters in an election win seats.

In the new scheme, the top vote-getter per seat would be elected to the board, even if that candidate's tally is lower than that of a candidate running for another seat.

Selectmen Chairman Diane Sullivan said bullet voting was proposed with the board of selectmen in mind, but applying it to other boards where a resignation opens more than one seat to elections, might be considered.

M & E bids for sewer work

The engineering firm of Metcalf and Eddy has asked to be considered for the operation of the town's wastewater treatment plant.

The sewer commission last month agreed to sign a contract with York Water Consultants (YWC) to operate and maintain the treatment plant until the end of June. After that time, the commssion will consider an extended contract with the private company.

The commission suspended the town's treatment plant supervisor, Manuel Salvador, in December. A disciplinary hearing on the suspension has not yet been scheduled. He is being paid his full salary while out on suspension.

In a letter sent to selectmen Jan. 27, Metcalf and Eddy Services Inc. stated, "It is our understanding you may be soliciting proposals from firms to operate and maintain your Town's wastewater treatment facility. M and E would be interested in submitting a proposal to perform this very important service. Should you require any information regarding our service company, please feel free to contact us."

Metcalf and Eddy is the engineering firm that designed the central sewer treatment plant project which was rejected by the town in favor of the current Ward Engineering alternative sewer program.

Basin needs to catch salt

Health Agent Joseph Godzik warned the highway department that salt stored in a shed at the town's landfill is leaching out and is not collecting into a catch basin. Dr. Godzik suggested the department relocate the pile or change the slope to the catch basin to collect all the leaching salt.

The conservation commission recently alerted the health board about the open storage of salt and sand mixtures at the landfill. Dr. Godzik acknowledged that not all the mixture can always be stored inside the shed, but he warned in his letter to the highway department, "as little as possible should be stored outside."

He also noted that the slope to the catch basin is apparently not correct and that some salt is leaching out of the pile . Dr. Godzik suggested relocating the pile or changing the slope.

In addition, the health agent stated, no salt should continue to be stored near the highway garage. Continued salt storage there should stop "in an effort to eliminate possible pollution of town wells in that area," he concluded.

Pratt resigns

Burtram Pratt of 75 Ripley Road, submitted his resignation last week from the board of registrars.

Pratt took out nomination papers for a three-year seat on the board of selectmen. Pratt's term on the board of registrars expired this year. He was chairman of that board. His resignation leaves a vacancy on the board of registrars.

Longevity payment problem

Town Accountant Joann Whittemore is having trouble deciphering the Caleb Marsh longevity payment calculations. As a result, some town employees may have been overpa id.

"If we find some errors have been made, and some employees have been overpaid but not by much, my feeling is not to take it back from the employees," said Diane Sullivan, selectmen chairman.

According to Sullivan, the accountant also is having problems reconciling past town practices regarding overtime pay, with the new Fair Labor Standards Act.

Under the new act,she explained, an employee must actually work 40 hours per week before he can start collecting overtime. In the past, if an employee was sick during the week, but worked on a Saturday, he was eligible for overtime pay.

Hingham regional pet shelter endorsed

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

On a three-dog night Monday, the selectmen decided to back plans for a regional animal shelter in Hingham.

The shelter is slated for a vote at Hingham's annual town meeting in April, and already has received a number of endorsements.

The proposed facility will serve six South Shore towns: Cohasset; Hull; Hanover; Scituate; Norwell; and of course, Hingham. It will be staffed seven days per week and will be able to accommodate 48 dogs, as well as cats and wild animals from Bare Cove Park, where the shelter will be located.

As he showed the board photos of area pounds, he commented, "We're in the dark ages here. We desperately need a shelter."

Cohasset's facilities consist of two chain link enclosures behind Casey's Kennel. Hingham isn't far ahead, with four cages in Murphy's driveway.

The building, to be built on Beal Street in Hingham, will serve not only as a regional animal shelter, but as an information center for Bare Cove Park, and as a garage for the Hingham conservation commission.

The facility also will offer phone and toilet accomodations to people using the park and adjacent playing fields, and there will be a classroom for nature and animal care classes, lectures and clinics.

"This is the most all-inclusive animal shelter I've ever heard of," commented Diane Sullivan, selectmen chairman.

The annual cost to Cohasset, said Hingham animal control officer Paul Murphy, will be about $7,200, a figure based on the town's population.

Building the facility may cost as much as $50,000 per year over 10 years, he noted.

Sullivan was surprised to learn that picking up dogs is not part of the package, yet. "Eight thousand dollars just to shelter dogs?" she said. She pushed regional pickups, as well as housing.

"We can't start out that way," Murphy said. "It's just too much." But he conceded, regionalization of the service is the wave of the future.

"When a selectman from Hanover, at a South Shore coalition meeting asked, 'Why can't we regionalize the service?' well, I almost fell over backwards."

The Cohasset selectmen will send a letter of endorsement to their Hingham counterparts, and the board will begin looking for a liason to join the animal shelter study committee in Hingham.

Selectman James Gallagher noted, "This concept is way overdue."

"We support this 100 percent," Selectman Rocco Laugelle said.

He thanked Murphy for trudging to Cohasset through the snow and suggested, "as a gesture of good faith" that he pick up a couple of dogs on his way back to Hingham.

What is causing the foul odor?. . .

He called the police to inquire about it. It got so Sullivan almost joked to the officers he would talk to on a nightly basis. He was referred to the board of health.

It was rare if the smell invaded his neighborhood and property. But two or three times that fall, it did smell and neighbors agreed.

"One night, the smell was so bad that it was in the hallway of my home and into the childrens' rooms. When I called police that night, they said they had been receiving calls from all over. It really burnt your nose. I figured for the smell to burn your nose, it must be a high level of something," he said.

The November night following a barrage of calls from all over town, Health Agent Joseph Godzik contacted DEQE. There was no immediate response and Sullivan began placing calls to the state agency himself. Dr. Godzik convinced the state engineers to come down and tour the facility assumed to be the source of the odor. Although the smell is rarely apparent during the day, DEQE left some testing equipment for the town to conduct when the odor is detected.

The smell continued to bother Sullivan and his family as he began to place calls to selectmen.

"It's been my argument," he said, " that the town should be forced to test immediately and to find out what is causing the horrible odor. We should not let bureaucracy move so slow, and if we let it run its course, it will manuever you. In this case, they should be manuevering bureaucracy."

The smell, which continues on an on-again, off-again basis at night and early morning, may or may not be harmful, Sullivan said. But his argument is that the town should be completely assured it is only a nuisance and not lethal to public health and safety.

He is satisfied with the town's actions thus far. "I think now they're beginning to move on it. But it had to get to the point that I had to go to selectmen and scream, and that's wrong. We have no idea at this point if it is harmful. I hope it isn't. I hope it's just offensive although no one seems to know where it's coming from.

"If it is dangerous," he continued, "then the landfill should be immediately shut down until an analysis is done of the situation and the town is assured that future useage will not contribute potentially dangerous odors."

Health Agent Godzik explained that DEQE sampled the air at the landfill on Feb. 2 A cover was taken off the landfill leachate tank and tubes were inserted into the tank to test the gases. A background sample of the air at the rear of the landfill was also sampled. Because there was no obvious odor that morning, DEQE left a second test kit with the fire department. That test was conducted after they received complaints about an odor Saturday night.

Dr. Godzik said the odor is difficult to describe, although it is his initial impression that it is the leachate in the landfill tanks. His impressions were substantiated by health board member Sherry Becker who traveled to the area last week.

The health agent said his office never received a complaint about the odor until Sullivan notified him, although the fire department had relayed several complaints throughout the fall.

Sullivan is hopeful a source of the odor will be uncovered. "I'm not sorry we moved here," he said this week. "I really like this neighborhood and I like this town. But I'm still facing a situation that seems to have no answers. If it is a dangerous odor, DEQE better be on this like a wet suit."

conditions seriously?"

Lipsett said he envisions a community organization whose members closely monitor the landfill operation and are assured that the Lily Pond is being protected.

He noted that Tuesday there was significant discussion at the State House about HB 120 which would change the method of selecting site assignments for local landfills. Under the governor's proposal, the DEQE would have the ultimate fate over where a landfill could be located, overriding the authority of a local health board. Waste haulers are the primary proponents of this proposal, Lipsett said, and they are battling environmentalists and local officials on the matter.

"I see our organization in Cohasset as trying to gather people together who feel that this landfill is a matter of great concern," he continued. "We want to find out as much as possible to understand this issue better. At this point we are very concerned about protecting our water supply, and at this stage we are just talking to people about this important community issue."

Super Stop & Shop traffic examined. . .

He noted," The assigned traffic volumes showed more than half of the traffic on Route 3A begins and ends more than one town away from Cohasset, wheras most of the traffic on Sohier Street and King Street has local origins and destinations."

Freeman said he estimated the amount of traffic which would be generated by a new shopping center in Cohasset, by studying Super Stop & Shop traffic in Barnstable and in Pembroke.

According to Freeman, a check of checkout tallys from the store in Pembroke in September 1985, showed a range of 2,360 to 3,343 customers per day, with the highest number on Saturday.

"We conclude," he said, "that the traffic generated by Stop & Shop at the North River Plaza (Pembroke) is 5,200 to 5,700 vehicles (going in, going out) during the average weekday." The figures for Barnstable were higher, 7,911 to 9,299.

"These supermarkets have become a cultural phenomenon," Bassett said, and have caused real traffic problems."

Board member Patrick Plante questioned whether comparisons to Pembroke and Barnstable are valid.

"We're comparing apples to apples," Bassett replied; "it may be macintosh to delicious, but the populations and the roads are essentially the same."

The planning board expects to receive the final version of Freeman's traffic study Feb. 13.

Sign unclear for Cohasset Colonial

The appeals board Thursday offered John Hagerty two options for the placement of his Cohasset Colonials sign on Border Street, but he found neither option appealing.

In December, Hagerty went before the board seeking relief to allow an 86 sq. ft. sign to remain in its new location, closer to the road, on his Border Street lot.

He explained, he spoke with Building Inspector Donald Robbins before constructing his sign, and was not trying to avoid the proper channels.

Still, several neighbors complained the new sign seemed more obtrusive to the surrounding residential neighborhood, so the board sought more information.

Hagerty said the sign seemed bigger because it was brighter, and he offered to paint his sign darker. He explained, he has not done so, because there have not been any days above 50 degrees, a condition the paint requires.

The board said two issues remained to be resolved: the validity of the sign size and location with respect to zoning regulations, and with regard to neighbors' wishes.

Last Thursday, the board told Hagerty he could put up a smaller sign 15 feet from the property line, or he could put his new sign back where the old one was.

Hagerty argued, his sign was pre-existing of the zoning bylaw, and therefore should be grandfathered.

"If you had left the sign where it was," Chairman Myrna Putziger said, "that would be true. That allows repairing the sign or replacing it in the same location, but this is a new sign in a new location."

Board member Mark DiGiacomo added, "The building inspector said there was some miscommunication. He was under the impression it would be in the same location."

Hagerty argued, the old location was unsteady, that the piling was in mud and the sign was leaning back and hard to see.

If Hagerty chooses to put up the smaller 40 sq. ft. sign, 15 feet from the property line, he must have the land surveyed at an expense of $1,000 to $1,500, because records regarding the borders of Border Street are sketchy, so it is difficult to determine where town property ends and his property begins.

The other alternative would cost him for moving his sign back to its old location.

Hagerty moved his sign in the first place, he said, to get it out of the water.

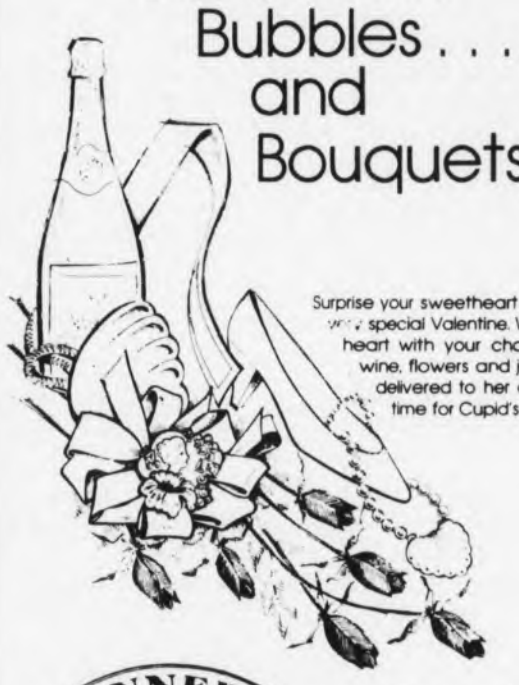
Now, he must decide whether to put a smaller sign closer to the road, or the big sign back where it was.

Sen. Bill Golden pleased with Clean Water Act

Massachusetts will be one of the main beneficiaries of the $20 billion Clean Water Act which was passed with a congressional override, according to state Sen. William B. Golden, D-Weymouth.

"I am tremendously pleased with the passage of the bill," he said. "It is critical for the cleanup of Boston Harbor and Massachusetts Bay.

"Without these funds, progress on the cleanup effort would have been halted," he said.



Massachusetts will be authorized to receive more than $600 million up until 1994, including $100 million to build a secondary treatment plant at Deer Island in Winthrop.

"It is clear the lion's share of the funds allocated to Massachusetts will be used for the harbor cleanup effort," he said.

"This funding, plus matching funds from the state, will help relieve the burden of paying for the cost of the cleanup from residents in the 43 communities served by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority," he said.

Political cauldron heats up for selectmen's race

More candidates announced this week their intentions to run for local office.

Thomas G. Churchill III of 4 Bound Brook Lane has taken out nomination papers for a three-year term on the board of selectmen. Lillian Murray and Martha Gjesteby have also announced their intentions to run for selectmen. There are two, three-year vacancies on the board. Incumbent Diane Sullivan said she will not seek re-election, and Mary Jane McArthur resigned from the board last summer.

William E. Baird of 55 Red Gate Lane has taken out nomination papers for a three-year seat on the board of health. Incumbent C. Michael Bliss is not seeking re-election to that board. Thus far, Baird is the only candidate for that seat.

Alfred S. Moore Jr. of 101 Fair Oaks Lane is the only person to take nomination papers for a five-year seat on the planning board. It is a seat currently held by chairman L. Christine Bassett.

Incumbent Ralph Perroncello has taken out nomination papers for a five-year seat on the housing authority. He is currently the only candidate for that position.

Roslinde W. Dole of 24 Howe Road has taken out nomination papers for a three-year seat on the board of trustees for the Paul Pratt Library. There are now three candidates for three,three-year terms. Doris R. McNulty has taken out nomination for the position she currently holds on the board, along with incumbent Sheila S. Evans. The remaining incumbent, John McNabb, has announced his intentions not to seek re-election.

There are also three candidates for the three, five-year seats available on the recreation commission. Donald Staszko will run for the office, along with incumbents Mary K. Muncey and Theresa England Duggan. No one has yet to take out papers for the three-year unexpired term which opened as a result of Beggan's recent resignation from the board to run for selectman.

There will be competition in the race for a three-year seat on the sewer commission. Incumbent Edward M. Guild will be opposed by Lot W. Bates of Red Gate Lane.

James Lagrotteria will compete against incumbent Warren S. Pratt for a three-year term on the board of assessors.

Nancy Sandell is the only candidate thus far for a three-seat term on the school committee. Incumbent Richard Conley said he will not seek another term on the board.

Incumbents who have taken out nomination papers but remain unopposed include: Town Moderator William Weeks, Town Clerk Frances Marks, Treasurer-Collector Elizabeth Ripley, Highway surveyor Harold Litchfield, and water commissioner William Montuori.

Nominations will be available at the town clerk's office until 5 p.m. Feb. 25 and must be returned there by 5 p.m. Feb. 27.

Exchange visits between Cohasset, Souppes-sur-Loing

Plans for exchange visits between Cohasset and her sister city in France, Souppes-sur-Loing, are beginning to take place all over Cohasset.

Thirteen-year-old Franny Druet will spend two weeks in July with the Welz family on Windsor Road. Franny's interests in tennis, swimming, and music make her an ideal match for young Alison Welz, who plans a return visit to Souppes next summer.

Since World War II, the Druets have had a special connection to Cohasset. Town resident Tom Churchill, who was Task Force Commander of Allied Troups during the war, liberated Souppes from German occupation. Prior to his entry into the town, the German army was planning the execution of several Soupciennes in the village church, and the Druet's grandfather was one targeted for the firing squad. Commander Churchill's timely appearance prevented the horrendous tragedy from occurring.

King Street and Forest Avenue will be the dual site of another three-week visit from Souppes this summer. Debbie and Tom Cook and Lee and Lee Jenkins will host M. and Mme. Jocelyn Meynard. Jocelyn is a professional photographer and his wife, Marie Paule, is a professor of French literature at the University. The Cooks plan to make a return visit to the Meynard's home in Souppes next summer.

Franny Duet (l) is pictured with her younger sisters. Franny will visit with the Weltz family this summer.

The Cultural Exchange Committee has on file several applications for reciprocal visits between the two towns. One such application is from Marie Pierre Ballot, who is a twenty-year-old student at the Institute of Technology in Paris. Marie Pierre would like to participate in an exchange visit with another student from Cohasset this summer. Anyone interested in visiting with the Ballots in Souppes and/or hosting Marie Pierre in Cohasset should call Weezie Welz, 383-9192 or Elizabeth Warren, 383-0336.

In response to many recent inquiries regarding the nature of the town of Souppes-sur-Loing, the Committee has put together the following information.

Souppes is a small village of approximately 4,000 residents and is located 90 kilometers south of Paris (a one and one half hour automobile ride or a one hour train ride). Five small schools, a train station, and a town-owned hotel grace the perimeter of the village center. A magnificent twelfth century church commands the middle of the downtown marketplace. Although not a coastal community, Souppes has strong ties to the water; the Loing River flows

She has 24 years of experience in providing service and guidance to public and non-profit groups including that gained as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Unitarian Church in Buffalo, N.Y. where she was also vice president of the church's women organization and was asked to serve on the continental board of that group. Active in the International Institute of Buffalo, she served as vice president of its Junior Board.

A former member of the Board of Rhode Island World Affairs Council, she chaired the Rhode Island Foreign Visitor's Program. She was a volunteer library aide in the Barrington, R.I. school system.

While living in Woodbury, Conn., Mrs. Dole was vice president of the League of Women Voters.

Prior to moving to Cohasset, she was active in the Andrew Kaul Memorial Hospital Auxiliary in St. Marys, Pa. which she served as a board member, vice president and project director. She also conducted workshops on fund raising for hospital auxiliaries located in Western Pennsylvania. In addition, she was president of various sports booster groups, president of a tri-county swim league and the organizer and first president of a regional school parents' council. While living there, she also organized and chaired an investment club.

Mrs. Dole is a member of the Board and publicity chairman of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and has been a volunteer at the front desk for the past several years. She is also a member of the Cohasset Historical Society, the Community Garden Club and has worked at the Social Service League's consignment shop.

In announcing her interest in serving as a trustee, Mrs. Dole indicated "A library is a very vital part of a community and we are fortunate to have a good one." She also noted how important it is to give something to the town you live in.

alongside the town and the entire area is dotted with innumerable natural ponds and lakes. Fishing, swimming, sailing, kayaking and windsurfing are listed as residents' major summer activities, in addition to horseback riding and hunting. The town also owns a large recreational area complete with gymnasium, clay tennis courts, and dining facilities.

During the month of July, Souppes families tend to stay home, pursuing both recreational opportunities in their village and cultural opportunities in Paris. In August, however, much of Souppes closes up as families take the month to travel throughout Europe or settle into vacation homes in the Alps or on the Mediterranean.

A close look

How many times do we have to be threatened before we take action?

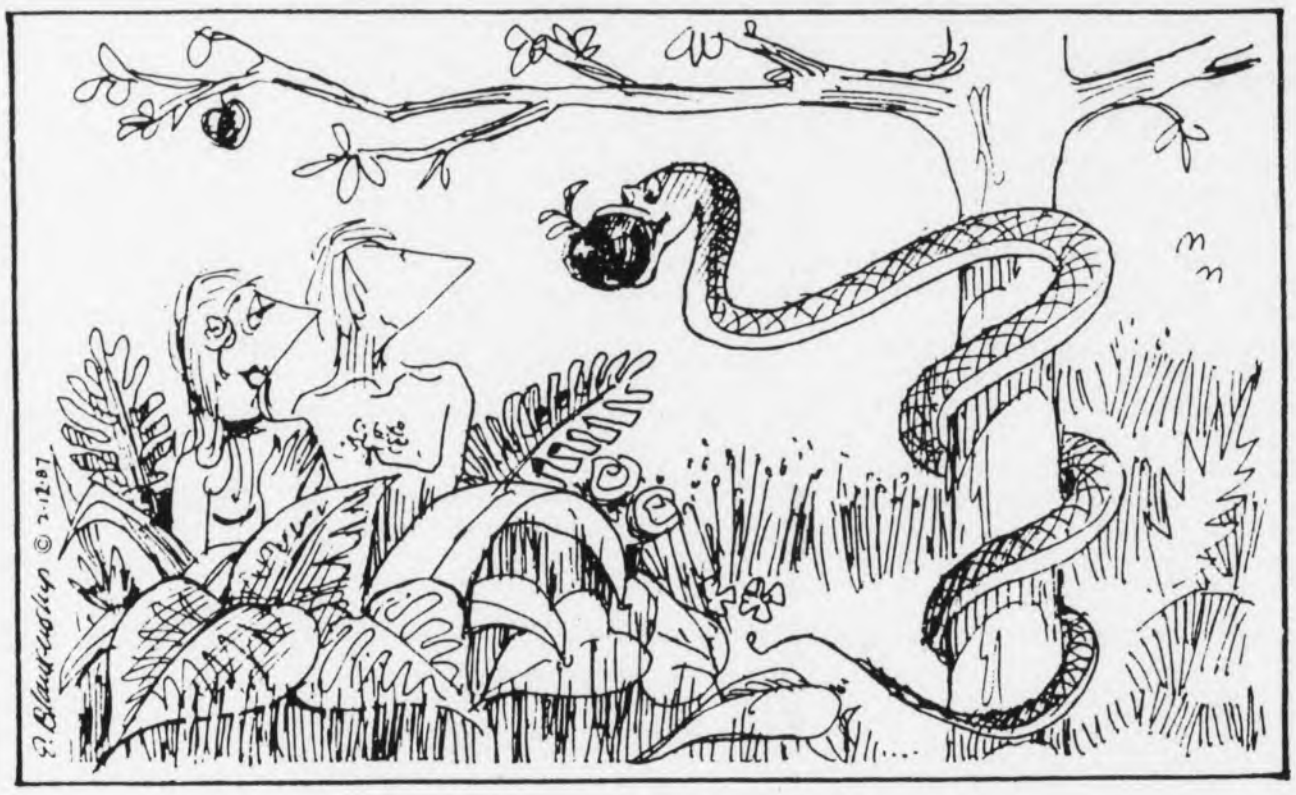
It is certainly not a simple issue with an easy answer. The past two years have at least proved that. Cohasset Heights Ltd. is still around, and the town is still fighting its existence.

And the increasing engineering and legal costs have now multiplied to where our fight against the landfill is the most expensive in Cohasset's history. There seems to be no conclusion in sight.

Fighting Browning-Ferris, Inc. is not an issue everyone immediately wants to become involved in. It's not like opposing a corrupt mayor or fighting to keep a school open. This is against an opponent that most of us have not seen, and many of us do not entirely understand. There are complicated engineering tests and surveys being conducted simultaneously. This fight is costing us thousands of dollars for a landfill many residents don't realize is there.

Anyone moving into our town is not told, "by the way, there's a commercial landfill located near your neighborhood that the town suspects may be polluting its public water supply." That kind of talk doesn't sell real estate here.

Yet, for newcomers to Cohasset, it is almost impossible for them to know that a landfill is located on that narrow side street off Rte. 3A. There is not one sign indicating its presence. Why, it's amazing all the BFI truck drivers know how to get there. There certainly are numerous other signs on Rte. 3A; the CHL one is omitted for a purpose.



Other people in town think our officials are not moving quickly enough. They want the landfill closed immediately - no more lawyers, courtrooms, engineers and surveys. If this landfill is even suspected of contaminating our water supply, many people simply want it put out of business.

There are those who are confused by all the surveys, tests and talk. But they realize that in today's society, change seems to come slowly. And backing out of an agreement is frought with huge legal problems - legal fights that cost huge amounts.

There is obviously no simple answer to this one. No doubt it was a mistake to ever allow a landfill in that watershed area. We are paying dearly for that mistake now. But money is money, and we're sure the residents of Cohasset would pay just about any amount to ensure a safe future for our children. If we could fight BFI on this one and be assured a win, taxpayers here would hand over their money.

But this is a big corporation and we are assured of nothing. We hope our town officials continue to monitor this situation closely and wisely. The ultimate solution would be to rid Cohasset of this landfill in a safe and timely manner. But the real problem is, how can we do it?

NEWS ITEM — FDA examines tainted apple juice. Prompted by local residents' complaints. Store-brands apple juice removed from area supermarkets. No illnesses. 'Smelled and tasted like kerosene,' Mariner is told.

"...Hold it right there...You notice a faint aura of kerosene, Adam...?"

'Peyton Place' has a familiar ring

Letters

To the Editor:

While watching a re-run of the old movie, "Peyton Place", it reminded me of how much our Selectmen resemble those of the small narrow-minded New England town depicted in the story.

My family and I have been residents of Cohasset for four and a half years now and I still cannot believe the pettiness of these so called professionals. They operate this town in such an archaic fashion it could be amusing if it were not so visably sad.

Such is the situation concerning Manny Salvadore. This man is the finest example of a dedicated town employee. Hard working, conscientious and always willing to help a fellow towns-folk.

We should not be surprised at the Selectmen's actions, however. All we have to do is remember the previous Fire Chief and now of course the Dog Warden. Can anyone imagine catching dogs and not having a place to put them or such little authority that people just complain and "he" goes away.

I believe these medieval representatives of our town should seriously examine their practices of representing the people. I for one, am ashamed at their blatant disregard for moral human practices.

Defense was tight for Cohasset as Jason Marsac (12), Matt Maloney (21) and Bryan Edwards try to block a Sandwich pass.

There was virtually no stopping Bryan Edwards during Cohasset's easy victory over Sandwich High.

Bryan Edwards beats out a jump shot against Sandwich during this week's home game.

J.V. starters Noah Hill (10) and Kosta Roukounakis (25) got some playing time against Sandwich. They saw plenty of action in the varsity match.

Special Cohasset performance

The March 7 performance of Noel Coward's "Present Laughter" by the Cohasset Drama Club is not just another show, according to Karin J. King, who is director of marketing for the Braintree Hospital Traumatic Head Injury Program.

The performance will be followed by a champagne reception at Kimball's By the Sea as a complete package called, "An Evening of Champagne and Laughter", planned to benefit the South Shore Region of the MA Chapter of the National Head Injury Foundation.

In conjunction with members of this group and other Braintree Hospital staff, King has obtained pledges from merchants for such prizes as a weekend in Ogunquit, Maine, gift certificates to local restaurants, and sporting goods that will be raffled that evening.

Those who want to purchase tickets for "An Evening of Champagne and Laughter" should call King at 848-5353, extention 338 or 410, or the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Head Injury Foundation at 898-7114.

Continuing through February, the exhibit opens Sunday, Feb. 8 with a reception from 4-6 p.m. in the Center's invitational gallery, 103 Ripley Road.

Cohasset High sports roundup: Playoffs loom

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

The girls started off the week by crushing Middleboro, 69-43. Coach Bill Fallon felt the key to this decisive victory was the way in which his team controlled the tempo of the game and got its fast break going.

Cindy Spooner led all scorers with 22 points and had an excellent game. Both Margie Murphy and Maureen O'Leary also played well for Cohasset.

Friday, the Skippers lost a tough game to a much improved Sandwich team, 52-46. Fallon was pleased with his team's effort but unfortunately Cohasset suffered from a few bad breaks which cost them the game. However, the night was not a total failure, for Abington also lost on Friday which enabled the Skippers to clinch the league championship.

Once again Cindy Spooner was Cohasset's high scorer with 16 points followed by Margie Murphy who had 14.

Tuesday, the girls face a weak East Bridgewater team, and Wednesday they play Hull in what should prove to be an exciting game. Fallon feels that if his team wins these last two games of the regular season, Cohaset will be seeded in the top 4 of division 3 which will insure a home court advantage throughout most of the state tournament.

Wrestling

The wrestling team had a very successful week, handily beating all three of its opponents. Wednesday, the boys started off this winning streak by blowing past Middleboro, 45-15. This victory bettered Cohasset's record to 4-1 in the league which tied them for second place overall. Coach Torin Sweeney was impressed with all the wrestlers on his team and felt this victory proves how much his team has improved this year.

John Rhodes, Tim Perotti, Doug Bennet, Peter Buckley, Glen Froio, Paul Froio, Liam Stanford, Pat O'Conner and Mat Deveny all picked up wins for Cohasset.

Saturday, in a tri-meet the Skippers beat Stoughton 45-19 and then went on to crush Weymouth South 48-15. Sweeney claims his team is wrestling the best it ever has, and these two wins gave the wrestling team the best record it has ever had in its history at 11-5.

John Rhodes, Tim Perotti, and Peter Buckley all had 2 pins for the day. Doug Bennet had one pin and one victory by decision along with Glen Froio. Liam Stanford only wrestled in one meet but came away with a pin and added yet another victory to his flawless record. Paul Froio, Pat O'Conner, and Mat Deveny each had a victory. Arthur Meachum picked up his first varsity victory by a score of 9-2 against an opponent from Weymouth South. Sweeney was also impressed with the efforts of Dennis Mulligan and Travis Coley on Saturday.

The boys have their last team meet Wednesday when they face Whitman/Hanson. This meet will decide which team will finish second in the league: The sectional tournament will be held during vacation on February 20, 21. Sweeney thinks his team will be one of the strongest teams at the tournament, and he hopes that at least three of his wrestlers will qualify for the state tournament.

Hockey

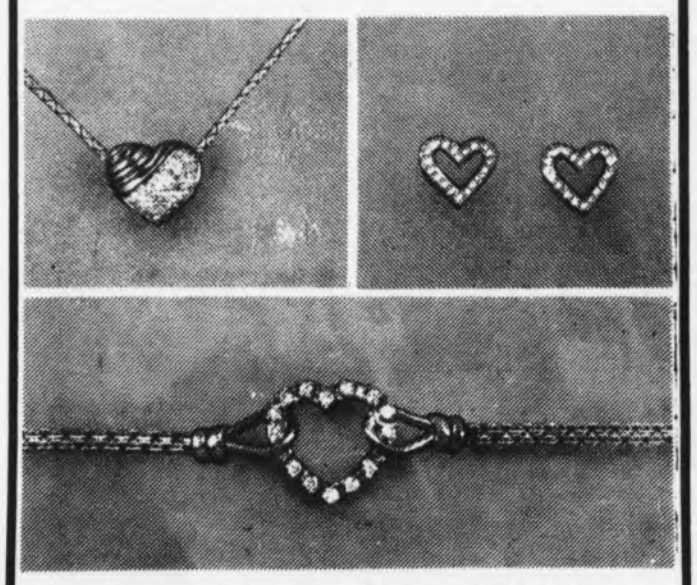
The hockey team put on a good showing last week and came away with two victories which brings them within one win of qualifying for the state tournament. Wednesday, in one of the most exciting and nerve-wracking games of the season, the boys finally managed to pull away with a victory over Duxbury, 8-6. After being up 4-0 well into the second period, Cohasset let its lead slip away and had to come back twice in order to win this game. Coach Dennis Walsh was pleased with the victory and felt his team showed a lot of character by hanging in until the end.

Todd Fitzpatrick led all scorers with 3 goals followed by Jeff Hartwell who had 2. Danny Pompeo, Craig Mulcahy and Mike Anderson each had a goal a piece. Goalie Peter Sandblom was spectacular in net and came up with many key saves.

Saturday, Cohasset skated past Scituate 7-1. Walsh felt his team outskated and outplayed Scituate and eventually wore them down.

Danny Pompeo had 2 goals and 3 assists for Cohasset and now leads the South Shore League by a wide margin in points. Craig Mulcahy had two goals, Jeff Hartwell picked up a goal and three assists, and Todd Fitzpatrick also scored for Cohasset. Walsh cited Mike Anderson as playing especially well in this game.

In the last two games on the regular season, the Skippers face Hull on Wednesday and Sandwich on Saturday. The boys need to win one of these last two games in order to qualify for the state tournament, and Walsh hopes to qualify on Wednesday by beating Hull.



Boys' Basketball

Tuesday, the boys walked over Middleboro 75-50. Coach Ed Minelli was happy with the win which allowed Cohasset to clinch its fourth straight league championship a feat never done before by a boys basketball team in the South Shore League.

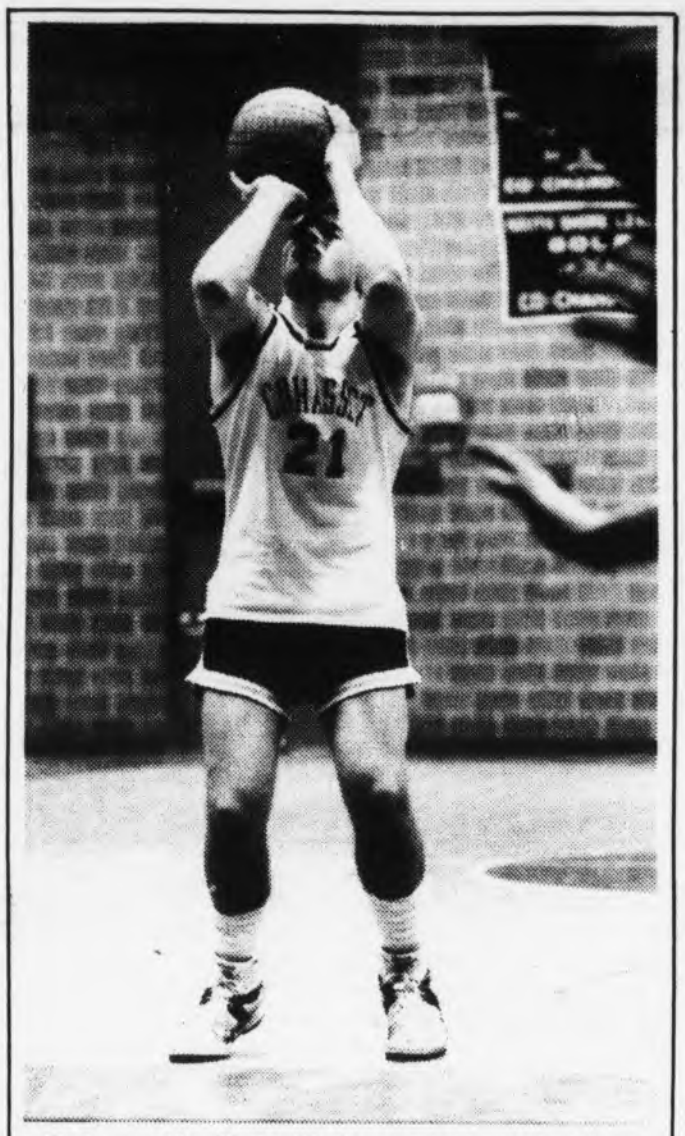
Bryan Edwards led all scorers with 22 points, and he also had eight assists. Mike Smith had a tremendous game with 14 points, 9 rebounds, six blocked shots and three steals. David Shultz with 10 points, and Dennis Jones with eight points both turned in good efforts for Cohasset.

Friday, the boys had no problems with beating Sandwich, 74-46. The outcome of the game was never in doubt, and added yet another victory to Cohasset's very long list.

Bryan had an outstanding game with 28 points and with an incredible 22 rebounds. Tommy Carson had 14 points, and Mat Maloney had 11. David Shultz and Rich Reddick were praised by Minelli for their efforts in this game.



Tuesday, the Skippers face East Bridgewater, and Wednesday they travel to Hull and take on the dreaded Pirates. During vacation the boys will be participating in a tournament held at Massasoit College where they will be facing talented Division 1 teams wuch as Weymouth North and perhaps Weymouth South. Minelli feels his team will have to work very hard to prepare for this tournament in order to compensate for the loss of injured starters David Shumaker and Mike Smith. Hopefully, this tournament will get Cohasset ready for the fast approaching state tournament.

Recreation Basketball Championships

Saturday marked the end of yet another successful basketball season for the 200 kids who participated in the Saturday morning recreation basketball league. The exciting season concluded with 6 championship games which involved kids from the second to the ninth grades. And the winners were:

In the second and third grade league, Leo's Exxon beat Strawberry Parfait in a very exciting game (I know I was there, in fact I was refereeing). In the fourth and fifth grade boys' league, Alco Oil defeated Target Industries, and in the fourth through sixth grade girls' league, Aveni Cleaners beat the Golden Girls. In the sixth and seventh grade boys league Robins Garage was victorious over Flemming Gifts. Harbor Liquors defeated Yankee Oil in the eighth and ninth grade boys league. And finally, in the seventh through ninth grade girls league, Magill and Gardner clinched the championship by beating Dwyer's Cleaners.

The Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club which helps to organize all of these leagues would like to thank all of the sponsers, coaches, concession workers, and fund raisers who were involved in making this year such a success.

Cohasset's Matt Maloney sets up a free shot against an easy Sandwich squad. (Kathy Perlow)

"Hub's top savings rate: 6.25%"
—The Boston Herald September 5, 1986

At a time when other banks are actually reducing rates, a passbook savings account that pays more than most money market accounts is big news:

The Hibernia Savings Bank now pays 6.25% on its regular savings accounts. (That's an annual yield of 6.54%, based on continuous compounding.) It takes $100 to open one and you only need to maintain a balance of $10 to earn the rate.

If you like the convenience, safety and simplicity of regular passbook savings —and want rates that are better than most money market accounts — stop by and open an account with Hibernia.

It will be good news for both of us.

Hunneman relocates

Hunneman's Cohasset office has relocated to larger quarters at 21 South Main Street. Hunneman president Saul Cohen commented, "that the nearly renovated 1228 square foot office adjacent to our present space will better accommodate the rapid growth of our Cohasset Staff." Elizabeth Murdy, regional director and Cohasset manager, saw "the move was necessitated by the tremendous growth of sales associates, almost tripling in the last two years." Murdy further commented, "the new space will also afford us Main Street visibility with a lovely courtyard that will allow us to better serve customer and clients."

Expansion for Charlotte Hair

Charlotte Hair Etc. recently went through an expansion program, much like the Art Center's. First located next door to the new center at 1 Pleasant Street, Phinney moved to larger quarters about a year and a half ago in the former Greenhouse Restaurant. The expanded salon has enabled her to increase services and business.

The Art Center's growth has precipitated their building program and the new facility will provide greater cultural resources and services for the entire South Shore.

For further information on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for $250 worth of services or products at Charlotte Hair, Etc., call the Art Center, 383-9548, or Charlotte's, 383-0960.

New custom calling features

Customers in Hingham and Cohasset will have the option of choosing from four new Custom Calling Services beginning Sept. 12, 1987.

Call Waiting, one of the new services, allows an additional call to be received while a customer is already on the line. In addition, customers can have three-way conversations with Three-Way Calling and can forward a call to another phone with Call Forwarding. Speed Dialing, the remaining option, allows a complete phone number to be dialed by pushing only one button.

These optional Custom Calling Services will become available for minimal monthly charges when New England Telephone activates a new, state-of-the-art telecommunications switching system Sept. 12, 1987.

Rec. Dept. report: Magician Joe Carota to perform

Tuesday, Feb. 17 at 1 p.m. at the Town Hall auditorium, the Cohasset Recreation Department will present magician Joe Carota.

Carota has performed on television, night clubs, and stage throughout the northeast for many years, and has been featured on Evening Magazine.

While the show is geared to children, it is ideal for all ages. Anyone who is interested in magic and illusions will find Carota's performances spellbinding.

The cost for admission is $2 per person which includes a magic book. Pick up time for children who are dropped off will be 2:30 p.m.

Pre-registration is not required, however, it is advised that you arrive by 12:50 p.m. for best seats.

VOLLEYBALL PROGRAMS

The Cohasset Recreation Department through the hospitality of the Scituate Recreation Department will conduct telephone registrations for two volleyball programs to be held at the Gates School gym in Scituate, Tuesday, from 7-9 p.m.

Women's Volleyball is held Tuesday evenings, from 7 to 9. Advanced adult co-ed volleyball meets also from 7 to 9 p.m.

There will be no fee for this program but registration should be made with the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791. Neither program will be held on school holidays, vacations or snow days.

RECREATION DIRECTOR'S ANNUAL REPORT — 1986

It is with distinct pleasure that the report of the Recreation Department is submitted to the residents of Cohasset. During Fiscal Year 1986, July 1, 1985, through June 30, 1986, 6,191 individuals of all ages participated in various structured recreation programs, special events and activities. As in past years, we are indebted to the increasing number of adult volunteers who have given generously of time, effort, and expertise essential to the conduct of many programs that budget restrictions would otherwise render impossible to operate.

Utilization of the Revolving Account Fund for self-supporting programs continues to allow the operation of a number of adult and children's specialized programs. During Fiscal 1986, a total of $13,535.20 was transacted through the Revolving Account affording us the ability to conduct a number of programs, ski trips, and lessons. While there are strict criterea for use and qualifications for the Revolving Fund programs, the programs conducted through the fund have no reflection on the tax dollar. In other words, the program participants alone pay 100 percent of the program cost via per capita fee charges.

Not unlike the Revolving Account Fund, are direct vendor payments which also do not reflect the tax dollar. Approximately $9,000 of programs, trips, and special events were conducted in this manner during Fiscal 1986.

A number of programs are conducted through the Recreation Commission's annual budget. Most programs have a minimal fee of $5 to $10 per participant, and in the case of children's programs, and 50 percent discount of subsequent children in the same family is offered in most cases.

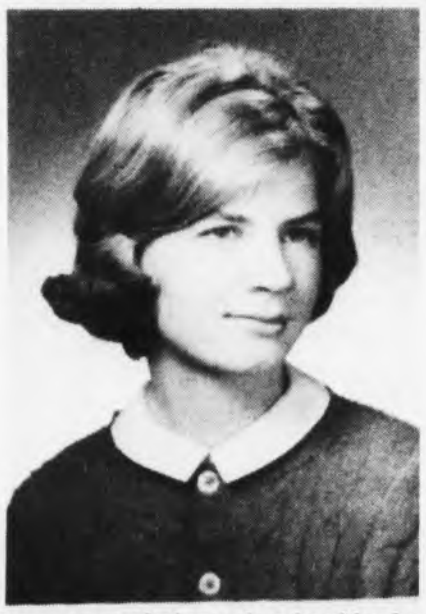
Through program fees during Fiscal 1986, the Recreation Department turned over to the General Fund of the Town $7,869. Monies turned over to the General Fund from recreation fee charges are not for future use by the Recreation Department. Rather, these monies are to offset the tax rate during the following Fiscal Year, hence, of benefit to each tax payer of Cohasset.

An additional sum of $20,456 was turned over to the General Fund during Fiscal 1986, via fees from Facility Permits. The figure $20,456 is $1,258 more than Facility Permit Fees collected during Fiscal 1985. Annual issuance generally begins the first Monday in June, and continues through mid-July. The Fiscal Year ends June 30 each year, hence, the number of individuals who obtain permits before July 1, of each year have a direct reflection on fees collected each Fiscal Year. Therefore, every two year period would reflect the average annual amount of fees collected. Fiscal Year's 1985, and 1986, indicate the average to be $19,827.

Each year we find ourselves indebted to various individuals, town boards, and town departments for their continuing assistance and support. This year is no different and our gratitude is expressed to all those who have lent a hand aiding us with our projects and activities.

Due to the extraordinary utilization 12 months of the year, of the Beechwood Play area, the Recreation Commission is currently in the process of lighting the area. Lights will be placed so not to offend area residents and will be on a timer which will cut them off before 10 p.m. during the spring and summer months, and earlier during fall and winter months. While the area is conducive to a number of sports and activities, the primary use seems to be basketball and street hockey.

As previously mentioned, volunteers of all ages have made a great number of programs possible that would not otherwise be so if we had to rely on budget monies to conduct all programs. Each year there are well over 100 volunteers who come forth to help with various programs such as soccer, basketball leagues, special clinics, and numerous events. To give an idea of the impact volunteers have within our structure it would be necessary, if each volunteer were paid $5 an hour for services, to quadruple our total program salary budget. We all owe a debt of gratitude to the people who donate their Saturdays, evenings, and even holidays to provide leadership, structure, and expertise for our children and programs.



Individually, each member of the Recreation Commission brings with them special areas of expertise, interest and knowledge. Collectively, they afford the Town of Cohasset a wide-spectrum of talent and input. They join me in thanks for your continued support of our programs, activities and services. We will try to continue to meet the dynamic needs of our community and welcome feedback and input from any resident.

Respectfully submitted,
John M. Worley,
Director of Recreation

'Tryg' Swift, Science Center director

When folks at the South Shore Natural Science Center mention Trig, they're not talking about high school or college math. They are referring to Trygve 'Tryg" Swift, 25, the Center's new youth education director.

Tryg will be taking over youth education programs at the Center and his duties will include teaching, coordination and organization of the programs. He said he hoped to build on programs already in place and utilize ideas he has gathered from his own background in the field of biology and environmental education.

While admitting that most young people his age do not have a strong environmental education, Tryg stresses the importance of such training. He feels that programs, such as at the Science Center, where children learn about the environment at an early age are especially valuable.

The young people of today, he added, will be the ones who must live in the future. If they are trained about the environment at an early age, he said, "they will be aware when they are mature and hopefully will not do anything to adversely affect their environment."

Tryg chose his field, he said, "because I am environmentally concerned." He said he feels fortunate to have a job at the Science Center because "most people who graduate with a degree in biology are not still in the field. If they don't have a Ph.D. getting a job in the field is even more difficult. I feel I'm lucky to still be in the field."

So far, his experience at the Norwell Science Center has been "great. I love it here. The people are so nice. It's an excellent place to be."

MUSINGS by John H. Cutler

☐ By 1990 will commuters still be driving along the Distressway?

☐ Just as I was learning to pronounce the names of places in Afghanistan, the Soviets are threatening to pull out.

☐ Are environmentalists polluting the economy?

☐ A good moderator's gavel never gets worn.

☐ I still don't know what this means: Never spare the parson's wine or the baker's pudding.

☐ The trouble with Cleveland is when you get there it's there.

☐ If you don't want to lose money in Las Vegas, don't take it with you.

☐ The psychiatrist cured him of his habit of worrying. Now he is going to the psychiatrist because he's worried about not having to worry.

☐ The only Phineas who ever got anywhere was Barnum.

☐ A dull man is always sure and a sure man is always dull.

☐ An old saying: "A countryman between two lawyers is like a fish between two cats." Another: "An egg today is better than a hen tomorrow."

☐ A definition of Hollywood: "They know only one word of more than one syllable here, and that is fillum."

☐ If the U.S. and the Soviet Union cannot end their differences, they can at least make the world safe for disagreement.

☐ The only thing I remember about Ellis Arnall is that he said: "Boston is a festering mud puddle."

☐ Sometimes you can solve a problem by realizing that there is no solution.

☐ Nobody ever listened himself out of a job," said Cal Coolidge.

☐ I always agree with James Thurber when he's right: "It is better to have loafed and lost than never to have loafed at all."

☐ Age may matter if you're wine or a piece of cheese.

☐ Pat Reynolds, an heir to the Reynolds tobacco fortune, is campaigning against smoking. Do you think his bank roll will go up in smoke?

☐ A Victorian Englishman said his creed was the "religion of all sensible men." Asked what that was, he said, "Sensible men never say."

☐ The precise center of the North American continent is in Rugby, North Dakota.

From the library

Children in all grades will be learning what it is like to be handicapped — blind, deaf, physically disabled, mentally retarded, learning disabled or emotionally disturbed. These sessions are presented by the teachers and by volunteers, using materials produced by the Children's Museum. On Tuesday, February 10th, 10-11 a.m., in the Osgood Library, we will be presenting a brief overview of these sessions. We invite anyone who might be interested in helping with one or two sessions in March, or who just wants to learn about the program, to join us. The program is fun, we work directly with the children, and the materials are easy to understand.

Please call Taffy Nothnagle 383-0895, or the school office, if you are interested.

'Good Neighbor' energy fund

Eastern Edison Co. is urging its customers to join in helping those facing financial difficulties to pay their heating bills.

"The Good Neighbor Energy Fund is a way Eastern Edison and other Massachusetts utilities can join with their customers to help those facing a financial crisis to pay their heating bills," says Arthur A. Hatch, Eastern Edison president. The fund is intended to help households that need assistance but which do not qualify for direct state or federal government aid.

The company matches each $2 customer contribution with $1 of its own.

"Eastern Edison has made a second-year commitment of $25,000 to this program," Hatch says. Customers are asked to send contributions directly to the Salvation Army, which disburses funds to eligible applicants.

Last year, Eastern Edison and its customers contributed more than $54,000.

"Our target recipients are the 'working poor,' low-income elderly, the handicapped and those experiencing financial hardship due to illness or job layoffs," Hatch says. Those who think they may be eligible, are urged to contact their local Salvation Army office.

Fantasy adventures from Deer Hill School

This week's stories from the sixth graders at Deer Hill are fantasy adventures (magic harps and castles in far-off lands. Ed.)

The Golden Harp

One day while I was walking down one of the streets in New York City, an earthquake occurred and I was sucked into a parallel dimension. When I awoke from the fall, I then found myself in a superior society compared to our technology back on earth. I then started looking around. Its architecture is incredibly awesome. If I brought some of these ideas back to earth they would probably give me millions of dollars for the aliens' idea. So I then started out on my adventure on this weird planet. While I was looking for something to snack on, I then saw something that looked like a library. So I started toward the building. I opened the door. As soon as I got there, I went straight to the card catalog. I found a card on a book on a lost harp. Its resting place was in Wampatuck State Park, a couple of miles away from my house. I then saw a card on a book that was by Frederick A. Robinsin. "That's my name!" I said to myself. It was called Architecture At Its Best. But maybe I brought these ideas already back with me. Earth is another time link but somehow time traveled at a faster pace than the original time pace.

Then I awoke with a shock when I heard my little brother playing Nintendo. After breakfast I started toward Wampatuck State Park. It took me about an hour until I got there on my skateboard. Then I started out on my adventure. I remembered that it said it was near a large stream and a cave encircling the harp. So I was looking for that description. I think it will be North because there are a lot of streams and caves. Then suddenly I saw the lost harp shining in the dim sunlight, it glimmered like a heaven-sent object from God. I rushed to it and tried to pick it up. It was no use. So then I strummed the harp and a cloud of blue smoke appeared and a large, fat Genie appeared. He wore a red turban and a purple cloak with quite a few large red and green gems embroidered on it. He spoke in a very deep, loud voice. He said, "Thou are the one who has been true of heart and first to see the golden harp, thus I will grant you three wishes." First, I wished for more spiffy clothes. Secondly, I wished for millions of dollars. Thirdly, I wished to be an architect. When I got home, all my wishes came true, and I became a highly respected architect. I also won the Nobel Peace Prize.

The Harp

One day I decided to go down to the stream to get some rocks for my collection.

As I picked up a pinkish purple one, I noticed a golden harp across the way.

I started to wade across the stream where the harp stood leaning against a rock.

I learned to play the harp years before so I began to play.

A strange feeling came upon me and I shut my eyes. When I opened them, there were people with horns and wings standing a short distance away. The sky was a pinkish-white. The bushes were filled with roses. The stream was glittering with gold.

Shocked by my surroundings, I fainted.

When I woke, I was in a large blue bed. A tall horned man was standing by me smoking a pipe.

"Where am I?" I asked.

"You are in the land of dreams little one," he replied.

"How do I get out of here?" I said. "I have to be home before dinner."

"The same way you came here," he answered.

I looked at my watch. "Five o'clock," I said. "Better be going now. Thank you."

I went to the stream. The golden harp was still leaning against the rock where I had found it before.

I closed my eyes and began to play. When I opened my eyes I was back at the same old stream with the same old environment. But the harp was gone.

The Harp

"The boy and the dog went to tend sheep long ago, where could they be?" said the boy's mean old grandmother.

"Probably out searching for that old mythical Harp," replied the boy's plump Norwegian grandfather.

The boy indeed was searching for the harp. The legend of the harp is, if you find the harp and say some magical words you will always have good luck and good fortune.

Most of the townspeople thought if you went searching for the harp, you were crazed and belonged in the hospital.

The boy and the dog kept on searching, no matter what the people thought.

Then the boy heard his grandmother yelling, "If you don't come home by the count of ten, you won't get any dinner." The boy ran as fast as he could and got home on the count of nine.

The next morning after the boy went to tend sheep, he went looking for the harp.

All of a sudden the boy came to a beautiful river. The river looked so beautiful the boy thought that was the place where the harp was.

The boy guessed correctly. There on a rock was the most beautiful harp he ever saw. "It's true," he thought, "It's really true." The boy chanted the magic words, then ran back to town to tell all of the townspeople.

Of course no one believed him because he was only a foolish boy.

He was a successful businessman selling hardware. He was the richest man in all of his state.

Only one man has found the magical harp, he too was successful in life.

The Harp

Once a long, long time ago where legends came true, there was a boy named Gillion. Gillion was around twelve years old. This boy's parents were very poor and his mother was very sick.

Gillion's father often talked about a golden harp hidden in the forest. He said that some day he would find this harp and sell it so they would never be poor and hungry again.

The next night the doctor came when the boy was in bed. He was just on the verge of falling asleep when he heard the doctor say his mother was going to die in a month if they didn't get enough money for medication fast.

The boy thought about the harp with its golden body and silver strings. That made up his mind. Gillion was going to find the harp his father always talked about.

Early the next morning before anyone was awake, Gillion got dressed and crept quietly downstairs. He got three loaves of bread, two packs of matches and five potatoes. Then he wrapped all this into a towel and tied the ends of it to the end of a stick. After that he got a pad of paper and a pen. He dipped the pen in ink and wrote—

Dear Pa,

I have gone to look for the legendary golden harp in the forest. I should be back in one to two days. Don't be worried. I'll take Mandy with me.

Gillion

He put his note on the table and walked outside grabbing his stick and a lantern with him. Then he called Mandy.

Mandy was a young bull terrier. She was very well trained and would do almost anything her owner told her to do.

As the two walked by their old shed, Gillion went in to get his canteen. He then filled it in the small stream that ran behind their shed. Oops! Gillion thought, I almost forgot Mandy's food. He went back into the shed and got a dozen biscuits. Now with food, water, and a lantern the two set out on their journey.

Later, at about noon, Gillion hadn't seen anything that looked strange. The boy sat on a stone to rest while Mandy lay down beside him. Gillion opened his towel and gave a biscuit to the white bull terrier. Then he ripped off a piece of a loaf of bread for himself. After their rest, they set out again. Minutes went by as the two explored deeper into the forest. Then hours began to run by. Finally, when it started getting dark, Gillion started looking for a place to camp and refill his canteen. In the background he heard a faint sound of a fast, flowing river.

When they got there, there was a lovely waterfall causing a beautiful rainbow. Gillion looked at the base of the waterfall where it crashed into jagged rocks.

Gillion filled his canteen and found a soft, mossy area that would be a perfect place to camp. He gathered some sticks, lit a match and started a camp fire. Then he took another stick, stuck it right through the middle of a potato and started cooking it.

After the two had eated their fill and drank some water, they lay down. The next morning Gillion woke up to thunder. Mandy was already awake. They both started looking for shelter. It was Mandy who found a small cave behind the waterfall. They went in and after walking through thorns and bushes, they came to another river. This river was much calmer than the other one. Just then Gillion noticed that it was as bright as daylight and they were in a cave! He was puzzled. Gillion looked around and then he froze. There, about fifty yards down, on the other side of the river was the golden harp. It was sitting on a flat rock. So it's true, Gillion thought, it's really true. Then he ran down the bank, dropped his stuff and jumped on the rocks until he got across the river. When he got to the harp, he tried out one of the silver strings. The tune was almost as the harp itself. He picked up the harp and crossed the river.

The next day Gillion came home. After his dad made a big lecture about leaving home while his mother was on the verge of dying he showed his father the instrument.

The man just stared at it and after that his father asked how he had found it. Gillion told him the whole story and he almost fainted.

The next day Gillion and his dad left to sell the harp in town. When that was done they both bought medicine for the sick mother.

Gillion's mother gradually got better and finally became very healthy. Gillion's family was never hungry again and they lived happily ever after.

The Land of No-Worries

One night very late, my Dad came home exhausted and hungry. As I was lying in my bed I could hear Dad saying to Mom, "It was another hard day, so many worries! We have to get away." It was at that moment I remembered a story my Grandfather had told me about a No-Worry Land, and that you had to make a special cart to get there, and you had to leave on October 7, 1995. That's this coming Monday! I'd better start working!

All Saturday and Sunday I worked and worked making the cart. Finally it was done. But there was one problem — I needed someone to help me test the cart. My friends would laugh at me and my parents were always so busy. But just maybe my sister Susanna would help. I couldn't wait to have no worries. When I told Susanna she was overjoyed. But she told Mom and Dad. She said, "Bye Mom, bye Dad. I'm going to test out the cart with Jeff and go to No-Worry Land." Of course as all parents do, they said, "It's too dangerous, you'll get hurt, we have to go together," all in one long sentence. After a lot of trouble, and begging, we finally decided that we would leave that night and if it didn't work we would not go at all.

The rest of the day went by as Papa worked in the fields, Mama packed bags, and Susanna and I worked on a sail for the boat. Finally it was time to go. We all trouped outside, locking our house and hiding the key. Slowly we carried the cart down to the river. First I got in, and then Susie, then Mama and Papa. Amazingly it stayed afloat. I turned on the propeller and off we went.

It was a nice quiet ride and Susanna fell asleep. After an hour or two we came upon a station right in the middle of the river! As we entered the station a voice sounded. "One person in each booth. Please enter booths!" As I walked in my booth there was a BEEP. Then the voice again. "This is customs for No-Worry Land. Please leave your worries here!" "But...but...how?" asked Susanna. The voice again — "Fill out these sheets with your worries." Some papers fell out of the walls. "What a weird place!" I said, and continued to fill out the sheets. Mom filled out 1. No kids fighting, 2. No wars (She didn't like fighting at all.) Dad filled out 1. No taxes, 2. No need for money at all. Susanna and I filled out 1. No grades, and 2. No prejudice, and Susie put no worries about getting a Benneton shirt.

After we left the station and were on our way again we came to a huge castle. NO WORRY LAND is said. Finally we had gotten there, but was it a dream? As we drew closer towards the castle I could tell it was really No-Worry-Land. We entered the castle.

Time passed and Susie and I easily got used to no grades and no prejudice. And Susie got her Benneton shirt. Mom and Dad adjusted to no fighting and no bills pretty easily too. Grampa's story was really true!

I'm crazy about selling my columns, and that means you can make your best deal ever on a new or used newspaper column by Paul Steven Stone.

We've got over 500 new and used columns just waiting for you, and everyone has to be sold by the end of the week to make room for new inventory.

Just look at some of the subjects covered in these drastically reduced columns: Ronald Reagan's Toys For Iran Program; the Idi Amin Comedy Hour sitcom; Brockton's Surprise Nuclear Attack On Kingston; I Never Loved Lucy: The Truth Revealed; Should Jordache Jeans Wash Its Mouth Out With Soap?; The Last Tree: A Developer Comes To Grip With His Guilt; and many many more.

Plus we have dozens of your previous favorites, many of them read only once by bored housewives and even more-bored barber shop customers.

It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to take advantage of Crazy Paul. I don't care if I lose my shirt as long as I clear all these columns off my desk by Lent.

Plus, you'll never have a better chance to get rid of all those old Crazy Paul columns you've been stacking up in your garage. Drag them in, send them by Federal Express, tie them to the back of the neighbor's dog — but get them in here to me for a tremendous price break on a ridiculously low-priced replacement column.

It's Crazy Paul's Biggest Washington's Birthday Sale Ever! And you'd have to be crazy to pass it up.

But hurry, this sale ends on midnight, June 28th, and it won't be repeated for months.

EXTRA BONUS: Two free 1987 columns for every customer who actually understands the point behind this column.

Customers responsible for home phone installation costs

New England Telephone's customers in Massachusetts will be able to obtain virtual end-to-end service reliability under two optional service plans announced by the company recently.

Announcement of the plans follows a 1986 Federal Communications Commission decision which made customers responsible for repairs to and installation of telephone wiring and jacks inside homes and businesses.

This change is part of the ongoing restructure of the telecommunications industry, designed to provide customers with more options when choosing telephone services.

The two new optional plans are called "TeleSure Maintenance Service," and "TeleSure Plus Maintenance Service."

"TeleSure" is a plan that covers repairs to customers' inside telephone wire and jacks.

"TeleSure Plus," provides the same coverage and, if needed, a loaner telephone set if a customer's telephone malfunctions — regardless of the manufacturer.

These two plans are in direct response to comments from customers concerned about unexpected repair bills, timely repairs and about whom to contact in the event of a problem with their telephone wire, jacks or sets.

Massachusetts customers are now receiving information on the new options in the mail.

NET will continue to provide inside wire repair service at no charge until March 1 in order to give customers time to understand the changes the FCC ruling will bring and to determine the manner in which customers will deal with repair problems after March 1.

SPECIFICS

"TeleSure," is a basic plan for one- and two-line residence and small business customers that covers the maintenance of telephone wire and jacks in their homes and businesses.

This plan which will cost $.45 per month for residential customers and $.95 for small business customers will cover problems which might occur with inside telephone wire or jacks.

These items would be repaired on site by an NET technician without any charge to the customer for the maintenance visit.

As has been the case for several years, if an NET technician finds the problem to be in the customer's telephone set, the customer will be billed for the service call.

"TeleSure Plus" will cost $1.95 per month for residential and small business customers. In addition to providing the same coverage as "TeleSure," this plan would provide a free loaner phone for up to 60 days if a customer experiences problems with a telephone set.

With "Telesure Plus," even if the problem is determined to be in the customer's telephone set during a visit by an NET technician, customers would not be billed for the visit.

Provision of the loaner phone for the 60-day period will allow the customer time to arrange to have the broken set repaired, or to shop for a new phone.

Prior to the FCC order, repair of customers' inside telehone wire was covered under the basic telephone rates. Telephone sets were the responsibility of customers.

Customers experiencing problems with telephone sets had to contact the vendor who leased or sold them the set.

"TeleSure" now gives customers the convenience of a loaner phone when a problem occurs with the set.

In conjunction with the new service offerings, the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities approved a tentative decrease of $.15 in the basic monthly rates for most residential and small business customers. This rate reduction was effective Febraury 1.

Customers who elect not to subscribe to one of the new optional maintenance plans may still obtain standard wire repair service from NET at competitive hourly rates.

Reader finds 'Attorney' Stone's Throw distasteful

To the Editor:

I have read the article on Page 16 of your Jan. 29, 1987 publication allegedly written by "Attorney" Paul Steven Stone. As a professional in the community, I must say that this article reaches new depths of tastelessness.

Upon investigation, it appears that Mr. Stone is not a professional, even though the article as written would give no indication of that fact.

If the intent of the author is to call the public's attention to those attorneys who do in fact run ads that could be characterized as less than professional, the point is well taken. However, the form of your article is equally as offensive and a misrepresentation of the status of Mr. Stone.

Most importantly, the tenor of your article would tend to hold the entire legal profession responsible for the unprofessional acts of a few.

I think that it is important that your publication print a clarification indicating, first of all, that Mr. Stone is not an attorney and second of all, the article was meant only as a parody.

Atty. Mark J. Gladstone

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

AIDS epidemic: silence fuels a new holocaust

There is an old story about a Lutheran priest who was taken to a Nazi prison camp toward the end of World War II.

He says, "When they came for the communists nobody stopped them because we thought the communists were a threat to our nation and way of life. When they came for the Jews nobody stopped them because Jews were different and did not accept Christ. When they came for me there was no one left to stop them."

From all kinds of media we now hear of AIDS. The National Academy of Science predicts there will be 270,000 AIDS cases in America by 1991 and 179,000 deaths.

Perhaps by then some of us might be saying, "When homosexuals started dying, I turned away because they were different and their lifestyles decadent. The same with prostitutes and injectors of illegal drugs.

"When teenagers started dying I turned away because what else could one expect when young people are not taught responsible sexual behavior.

"The number of people infected by blood transfusions was a very small percentage. Normal people don't die from sexually transmitted disease.

"So when I discovered I had AIDS we still had not devoted enough time and money to stop it. There is no cure. I will die."

If this seems unlikely, then it is because you have not yet had a friend die of AIDS. You will.

Susan Sontag, whose book "Illness as Metaphor" was written before AIDS, warns against comparing AIDS to the Holocaust. In the current issue of Vanity Fair she says, "The Holocaust was inflicted by human beings on human beings. It's wrong to compare a situation in which there was real culpability to one in which there is none."

But is there really no culpability?

Let us begin with evangelists who have stated that AIDS is divine retribution against homosexuals.

It was once acceptable to say segregation was divinely inspired. It was once acceptable to brand Jews as Christ-killers and usurers. Homosexuals are the current category it is acceptable to damn.

Culpability also rests with the current administration, which is so homophobic it can barely acknowledge AIDS exists. The State of the Union address alluded to Benjamin Franklin and the president's mother, but not to the number one killer of young people, ages 20 to 29 years old in New York City.

The Contras and the Sandinista army could kill each other down to the last man and not run up a body count like AIDS.

Like the good Germans of World War II who thought the Nazis could be controlled after they eliminated the communists, suburbanites don't want to think about AIDS.

Homosexuality is not talked about in the suburbs.

If AIDS were limited to homosexuals we'd still be surprised at how many suburbanites would die. But the fact is that it is now spreading to heterosexuals.

This lends a much more direct threat to our communities. Many upstanding citizens have strayed from the narrow path of matrimonial fidelity. Many had sexually active lives before marriage.

If they read the AIDS cover stories in recent issues of The Atlantic or U.S. News and World Report they have some reason for concern.

AIDS showing up years after contact. A huge precentage of prostitutes showing signs of transmitting the virus. Hordes of settled suburbanites are wondering about that business trip in August or that Saturday night the year before one was married.

This increase in suburban angst is shown by the recent interest in our teenagers' sex lives. When adults feel threatened they instinctively move to protect their children.

In recent months the action of the surgeon general in support of contraceptive devices and information is admirable. Many more parents are interested in sex education both in and out of school than were even one year ago.

AIDS is one factor. So is teenage pregnancy. A Texas hospital reports that 35 percent of its pregnant women admitted are 19 years of age or younger.

Yet some say teens should be denied contraceptive information or products. Those advocating denial confuse innocence with ignorance.

Innocence in children is a wonderful but transitory stage, and it passes much more quickly than it used to. We have sold the innocence of our children to Madison Avenue.

It is no longer possible to protect one's children by attempting to shield them from lurid and enticing sexual images. We are drowning in them. The only way to protect them is with information and communication.

Until parents are willing to deal honestly with their own sexuality and the real world their children inhabit, we condemn the next generation to early pregnancy and disease, which means poverty, shattered dreams and death.

Dr. William Grace, chief of oncology at New York's St. Vincent's Hospital, says that in four years, at the present rate of increase, they will be able to use every medical bed in New York City for AIDS victims.

In 1985, 12,000 AIDS patients cost $6 billion dollars, six times the cost the society paid for coronary-bypass surgery. Can the nation survive the cost of over a quarter million cases, which we will have in five years?

It has been said that entire nations in Africa will be destroyed as AIDS moves through their heterosexual populations. What will the U.S. be like, with the disease already incubating in over a million people?

Want to talk national security? Want to talk threat to our way of life? Isn't it long past the time to make AIDS research a national priority, to hear our national leaders speak as eloquently about AIDS research as they now do about weapons systems and economic growth?

And finally, isn't it time local citizens put away their vows of silence and spoke of their fears and anger? Religious leaders especially need to learn about AIDS so they can minister to the people in their congregations which are and will be touched by this tragedy. For it is obvious that before long it will touch us all.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — by CLAIRE McDONOUGH

The America's Cup, just don't leave Perth without it

"What's Dennis Connors' address?" the Dragon asked.

"I've no idea," I told him. "Why?"

"Why?" he repeated incredulously. "Why? I can't believe you said that. Have you no imagination, woman? Don't you read newspapers? The America's Cup is looking for a home.

"Connors feels the people in Newport didn't treat him very nicely, and he's considering taking the Cup elsewhere. I understand that several yacht clubs across the country are vying for the honor. Well, what's wrong with having the America's Cup on the South Shore?

"I'll bet I can convince Captain Connors to bring it here."

"Here?" I asked nervously. "In this house?"

The Dragon looked disgusted. "No, not in this house. People would probably come to our door and ask to see it and you'd tell them to come back when 'Barney Miller's' over. Or when you're through using your exercycle.

"No, have a little vision. Just think how impressive it would be in a glass case over Angelo's snack bar."

"Surely you jest," I said. "And anyway, have you given up your plan to lure Prince Charles and Princess Di to Angelo's? I thought you were plotting to entice them to the South Shore."

"Sure. Was. Until you actually met Prince Charles and never said a word to him about coming to Angelo's. I figure if I can't get cooperation from my very own wife, I might as well forget that one. And anyway, now that William Arthur Philip Louis Windsor is getting near school age his parents probably won't be able to travel around as much as they used to.

"They probably have to plan their vacations for when school's out, and that's when most of the Angelo's regulars go to Disneyworld or New Hampshire.

"No, I've decided to go for the America's Cup. The South Shore has always been a seafaring community and people would come from all over to see it here. We could stage related events in the summer like mini-cup races. Angelo's could put appropriate specials on the menu. Like 'whipped kiwi' or 'kangaroo on ice.'"

I shook my head. "Look. Even if, by some stretch of the imagination, Dennis Connors were to agree to bring the Cup to the South Shore, why should it be in Angelo's? What's wrong with the yacht club? Or the boat club?"

"I considered them," he admitted. "But I've decided to go with Angelo's. Sure, the people we know who belong to the yacht club are really nice, but you have to remember it was yacht club types who turned Connors off from Newport. And don't you have to be a member to get in? Or at least a member's guest? No, I say we make the America's Cup accessible to all Americans. And Angelo's is where the real people are.

"We can have wine and cheese and quiche parties, and people can celebrate the Cup and get a little food shopping done at the same time.

"Visitors will come from everywhere in the world, and it'll be great for business. I'm really surprised that the Chamber of Commerce hasn't already thought of this."

"Not everyone has your imagination," I assured him. "Do you think there's enough room in Angelo's for all the people who'd come to see the Cup?"

"People don't mind waiting in line," he told me, "for a really class event. Remember the lines waiting to get in to see 'The Exorcist?'

"And people will shop in other town stores while they're waiting for a lull at Angelo's. Business will be wonderful.

"Maybe," he added thoughtfully, "we should consider opening a bed-and-breakfast."

"I glared at him. "By 'we' I assume you mean you and your second wife."

After a few minutes, the Dragon threw his paper in the waste basket. "I've decided to forget the whole thing," he announced.

"Because you don't want to risk losing me?" I gasped. "Darling, I really am deeply moved."

He shook his head. "No. Because I'm afraid that the Cup might take up too much room. And Angelo's might not have space for bow ties or clam chowder. And because kangaroo on ice sounds gross and disgusting."

I nodded. "It might play in Perth. Or even Peoria. But never on the South Shore."

Give your Valentine homemade chocolates

How to say "Be My Valentine" without wiping out your bank account may not be all that easy. This holiday weekend begins with a flourish with St. Valentine's Day Feb. 14.

There'll be an orgy of shopping for heart-shaped chocolates, flowers, lacy lingeries and for those inclined to let their heart rule their head, even diamonds or rubies.

If you really want to sing the praises of your Valentine, offer a little gift of your time spent creating something such as these truffles.

Adored by all chocoholics, rum-flavored truffles were selling at one New York candy shop for $20 a pound, $12 a half-pound. Sherry White makes them this way, using a recipe from a book which I plan to send away for called "The Yummy Book." With a label from a jar of Marshmallow Fluff, the 29-page booklet is available from Durkee-Mower Inc., P.O. Box 470, Lynn, MA 01903. Here is an ever-so-easy recipe for their

CHOCO-FLUFF TRUFFLES

2 C semi-sweet chocolate pieces
1 jar (7 1/2 oz.) Marshmallow Fluff (2 C)

In top of double boiler, over hot, not boiling water, melt chocolate. Blend in Fluff. Add flavorings (below). Cool slightly. Shape into 1/2" balls. Makes 1 pound.

FLAVORINGS: Peppermint: knead in 2 tsp. peppermint extract. Shape into balls. Roll in chocolate sprinkles.

Coconut: after shaping plain chocolate truffles, roll in flaked coconut.

In Victorian Days, a Valentine from one's sweetheart was apt to be a nosegay of violets, homemade confections or sonnets written on paper hearts.

Now when romantics have taken to going all-out with a dozen roses costing around $40, jewelry and everything that is heart-shaped, something "From the Kitchen" is welcome, too. Where once, red cinnamon candies, heart-shaped candy wafers with slangy sayings, or a Whitman's Sampler were the only choices, now chocoholics have much to choose from. Another recipe from "The Yummy Book" is called

HARVARD SQUARES

1/3 C butter or margarine
1 1/2 C graham cracker crumbs
1 jar (7 1/2 oz.) Marshmallow Fluff
1/3 C milk
1 pkg. (6 oz.) semi-sweet chocolate pieces
1 can (3 1/2 oz.) flaked coconut
1 C chopped walnuts

Preheat oven to 350. In 13"x9" baking pan, melt butter or margarine. Sprinkle crumbs over butter. In small saucepan, over low heat, combine Fluff and milk, stirring until smooth. Pour over crumbs. Top evenly with remaining ingredients. Press down gently. Bake 25 to 30 min., or until lightly browned. Cool completely. Cut into 2" squares. Makes two dozen.

For several years now a group of friends have shared a condo in Bartlett, N.H., skiing the slopes weekends.

This past weekend "the girls" left their families at home and went off to ski, wondering whether they'd do more eating or skiing.

Cindy Wilson, Jackie Dobson, Sissy Mayo and Ginny Zirpolo always plan their weekend meals ahead of time, keeping in mind that the last thing they want to do after skiing is spend hours in the kitchen.

"Simple is better" and no one wants to have meals that take too long to cook and are messy to clean up afterwards. Friday nights they eat on the way up to the condo. Saturday's dinner for 10 is usually the heartiest meal — sometimes a casserole made at home and frozen, chowders, or an eye of the round roast with pan-roasted potatoes, roasting while the group is skiing. Wonderfully easy and tasty, too, was one meal they served called a

RAGOUT

This may be varied by adding claret or Marsala wine; sliced sauteed mushrooms, tiny white onions or olives.

HEAT: 1 1/2 C gravy, or 1 can undiluted mushroom or celery soup.

ADD: 2 C cubed, cooked meat such as beef, veal, lamb or pork. Season to taste with Worcestershire Sauce, cayenne, or onion juice. Heat, but do not boil. Serves four.

Joan Smoot's recipe for Strawberry Cheesecake in last week's column calls for two packages of cream cheese, not one pkg. as those little gremlins would have you believe. Still waiting for your recipe to perk up our February blahs . . . Joan.

Seal program sponsored by Audubon Society Feb. 12

Bob Prescott of the Mass. Audubon Sanctuary at Wellfleet Bay will present an illustrated about seals along the New England coast Thursday, Feb. 12, at 7:30 p.m. at the South Shore Sanctuaries headquarters, 2000 Main St., Marshfield.

This program had been previously scheduled Jan. 22.

During the February vacation, several programs for children and for families are planned. A $6 fee will be charged to members, and an $8 fee, to non-members.

On Wednesday, Feb. 18, from 9:30 a.m. to noon, a naturalist will talk to children about life under the snow. Youngsters between the ages of seven and 10 will be able to conduct experiments and make observations of winter environments.

Children between the ages of nine and 12 can try a hand at orienteering at the North Hill Marsh using a compass and map. This program is being offered from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 19.

On Saturday, Feb. 21, from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., a program on natural photography for children seven and older as well as parents will be offered.

Observational skills are more important than having the "right" kind of camera for this beginning workshop.

Cost for this program is $2 for members and $3 for non-members. A fee for children will be $.50 for members, $1.50, non-members.

Art Center donators eligible for gift certificate

Charlotte Hair, Etc. of Cohasset, is helping the South Shore Art Center open the doors of their new building in a unique way.

Those who make a donation to the Art Center's Captial Campaign through this special offer will also be eligible to win a $250 gift certificate for any services at Charlotte's salon.

For each $5 of gift value to the Capital Campaign, donors will have a chance on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for any of the following at Charlotte's: hair cutting, styling, coloring, perms or conditioning treatments; scalp massage, facials, tanning, manicures, make-up application, or cosmetics, nail and skin care products, gifts or jewelery.

If, for example, a donation of $50 is made, the donor will be entitled to 10 coupons in the drawing. Donations must be accompanied by a raffle coupon (available at Charlotte's or the Art Center) or marked "Charlotte's Spring Drawing" and sent to the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset 02025 by March 16.

The drawing will be held at Charlotte's March 20. Those eligible for the drawing need not be present.

Charlotte Phinney,owner of the Stagecoach Way salon, has watched the Art Center's expansion project take shape from across the town parking lot.

In addition to the aesthetic improvement of the corner now occupied by the emerging two and-a-half story headquarters for the Center, she is enthusiastic about the potential for the Center's programs and services. "The new Art Center will benefit the whole village and surrounding towns," Phinney says.

Charlotte Hair Etc. recently went through an expansion program, much like the Art Center's. First located next door to the new Center on Pleasant Street, Phinney moved to larger quarters about 18 months ago in the former Greenhouse Restaurant. The expanded salon has enabled her to increase services and business.

The Art Center's growth has precipitated their building program and the new facility will provide greater cultural resources and services for the entire South Shore.

For further information on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for $250 worth of services of products at Charlotte Hair, Etc., call the Art Center, 383-9548, or Charlotte's, 383-0960.

At the South Shore Science Center . . .

Join expert birders Beverly and Myron Litchfield of Norwell at South Shore Natural Science Center, Jacobs Lane, Norwell, for a closer look at local winter birds from the visitors to the feeder to coastal ducks of Scituate. Beginners are especially welcome! Bring binoculars, dress warmly and meet at the Science Center on Wednesday, Feb. 25 from 9 a.m. to noon. Prepaid registration required (members/$4.50; non-members/$5.50). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

Scotland, Ireland, Wales

From deer in the Scottish Highlands to castles in Wales, Caroline and Jim Brown have a whirlwind tour waiting for you. Bring your imagination and stay for a British High Tea, on Friday, Feb. 27 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Prepaid registration required (members/$7; non-members/$9). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

Orphaned Animals

Would you know what to do if you found a baby bird or young animal this spring? Parents sometimes leave their young unattended in search for food only to return to find babies gone. Learn to do what's best for the young and the balance of nature. Be prepared for the "spring offspring!". The whole family is welcome for this slide presentation and talk on Saturday, Feb. 28 from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Prepaid registration required (members/$2.50; non-members/$3.50). Call 659-2559 for registration information.

South Shore natural Science Center is on Jacobs Lane, Norwell and is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays and 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Sundays and most holidays. Trails, exhibits, library & gift shop. Free admission.

Retarded citizens hearing Feb. 11

The South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens (SSARC) will hold its second annual Public Hearing February 11 at 7:30 p.m., in the council chambers at Quincy City Hall.

William Delahunt, Norfolk County District Attorney, will again moderate the hearing.

The following topics will be discussed:

The needs of older unserved clients — those past the age to be covered by the Chapter 688 Law. There are many such unserved people, often still living at home with parents over 65 years old, with no guarantee of residential or other services when their parents can no longer care for them.

The need for a variety of family support services, not only respite care, but extended day programs, recreation programs, and specialized in-home programs.

The new Department of Mental Retardation, especially coordination of services, community participation, and citizen input.

The final issue of concern is the generally low salary levels which are causing high staff turnover and recruitment problems in programs serving mentally retarded individuals.

For more information, or to testify, call 294-8100 and ask for Gail.

A CONGALTON TESTING SESSION: THE FIRST SERIOUS STEP.

Imagine the life of a model: Beautiful clothes, parties, world travel; there are few professions that conjure up a more glamorous image. A Congalton testing session could be the first serious step toward becoming a model, but first we would like to correct a few misconceptions about modeling as a career.

1. Modeling is a full time career. Definitely not. Most models, especially in this area, are not making a living from modeling. They are modeling "on the side" to supplement their income, or pay for college. (At $100.00 to $150.00 an hour, that's quite a nice supplement.)

2. Agencies are only looking for 5'10" covergirls. Again, definitely not. There are, in fact, many different modeling categories including character models and boy-next-door/girl-next-door types.

3. Modeling is glamorous. Well, up to a point, but modeling isn't all glamour, it's work . . . well paid work, but work just the same. It takes persistence, experience in front of a camera, and a portfolio. At Congalton Photography we can provide at least two of these things . . . and maybe a whole lot more. Still interested?

Good, then it's time to drop by the studio. You will be able to look at examples of other testings, browse through recent modeling agency books, and talk to us about any and all aspects of a testing session. We can give you expert advice on hair, makeup, props, posing, outfits and even discuss the look or looks that might be appropriate for you. If you would like, we can take this time to book an appointment.

An actual testing session takes about two and a half hours. It's fast paced. There are lights, music, props, and action as the photographer gives direction from behind the camera . . . That's right, chin up a little, put your weight on your right leg and give me a little slink, smile, fantastic! These will be photographs that say a lot more about you than an ordinary sitting or snapshot ever could, and for a very reasonable price.

A Congalton testing session is $160.00. A deposit of $50.00 is required to book a date. Please call us with your questions or to let us know when you would like to stop in and talk. Call 826-2788 or 826-2843.

State finally approves $2M sewer package

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The sewer commission received "excellent news" this week. The state has approved the town's $1.95 million sewer plan - "at last," commissioner Edward Guild said.

After more than two years of rejections and delays, the town's amended Ward Engineering sewer plan has received conditional approval from the state.

Additional meetings between the state and the town's engineers will be scheduled to address final technical matters. According to the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), "it is our belief that an approvable facilities plans can then be completed."

The plan, which was originally endorsed by the June, 1984 town meeting, has been amended since that time. The most significant changes include connecting the Cohasset pumping station into Hull's treatment facility, and the expansion of the sewer area to include Rte. 3A and the Ledgewood sections of town.

Based on those changes, DEQE's Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) notified the sewer commission this week that "we are in basic agreement with your proposed sewer service area and the concept of the Hull connection."

Before final approval is granted, an agreement between Hull and Cohasset must be finalized. Sewer commission chairman Charles DeSantis said he is "very optimistic that we will finalize an agreement with Hull in the very near future. The real difficulty," he commented, "was getting to the point where we are now. Each individual sewer commissioner and selectmen in Hull and Cohasset realizes the extra benefit this connection into Hull will be for both towns economically and environmentally. With this major hurdle behind us now, I forsee an agreement with Hull in the immediate future."

Hull residents approved a resolution at an October special town meeting, urging the sewer commission to complete an intermunicipal agreement with Cohasset. The agreement, which is still being finalized by engineers for both towns, would allow Cohasset to dispose of 300,000 gallons of wastewater into the Hull treatment plant. The "big pipe" plan would be included in the first phase of the approximate $1.2 million design and construction project.

Student's doodling turns to passion

He began as a fifth grader, doodling upon a pad of paper on his way to and from school. His ride from Boston each morning into Cohasset provided him with lots of creative spare time.

Now Dudley Bryan's artwork is commanding attention from many directions. It is no longer simply a way to occupy free moments.

Channel 38, WSBK-TV in Boston, came to Cohasset last week to film young Dudley at work in a CHS classroom. The program, which assistant producer Marge Shankin described as "a program for kids and about kids," will highlight Dudley as a talented young artist from Boston. Dudley has been a Cohasset METCO student since the first grade.

The television program will be aired sometime in March, although a definitive date has not been set.

Much to his art teacher's surprise, Dudley's pen and ink sketches are the cherished momentos of his friends at school. Classmates frequently ask the young artist for a signed copy of his work. He willingly obliges, according to CHS art instructor Colleen Lucas.

The most popular and most frequently-requested work is of Crusher, the superhuman hero who, according to its creator, "tries his best to be a defender against any threat in the world."

His long-running comic strip hero, which began about three years ago, has artistically matured since he first appeared through Dudley's efforts. The artist admits he has refined the muscular structure of this defender of justice, and has added many more cast members to the cartoon.

Crusher has successfully battled against the evil characters belonging to KAOS. One new and popular

Transfer station plans to be reviewed

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

A transfer station to help fulfill Cohasset's future waste disposal needs may be on line as early as 1988.

Within the next two weeks, the disposal area study committee will send engineers its proposal for building a transfer station at Cohasset's municipal landfill on Cedar Street.

The committee will not be asking for construction funds at Town Meeting in April, but Chairman Priscilla Tebbetts said the request will be put before the voters "pretty soon." She estimated the project's price tag at about $350,000.

The installation of a transfer station within the next three years is imperative if the town is to preserve the disposal area it has, noted Joseph Laugelle, the landfill's longtime supervisor.

The committee has been working with the South Shore Coalition in an effort to determine a regional solution to waste management, according to Tebbetts. It is looking toward possible inclusion in an expanded SEMASS, the resource recovery center in Rochester, which excluded the town in 1985.

"We're interested to see what Weymouth will do," she added, "It's a big town, and they have been talking about building a facility there. They seem to seriously want to build a resource recovery center."

Laugelle agreed, Cohasset will have to sign up with someone or help to form a regional incineration plant. "It's the nation's number one problem, trying to get rid of trash and toxic waste."

The present life expectancy of the Cedar Street landfill is 11 years. "There's only one reason," he explained; "we keep commercial rubbish out of here. If we put commercial rubbish in here, you could cut that time in half."

The municipal landfill does not accept demolition debris, stumps, logs or even tires.

Speaking of long lifespans, plastic bags are allowed at the landfill, but they do not make Laugelle glad.

"This is the world of plastic today," he said. "The problem is, a plastic bag won't break down in 100 years; it's not biodegradable.

"But everybody uses plastic bags. If I set up a business here, it would be selling plastic bags," he quipped. "They're clean and they're strong, but

Cell work stalled

Building Inspector Don Robbins informed selectmen last week that the suicide prevention cells at the police station remain 95 percent complete.

According to Robbins, the supply of the light/speaker fixtures is in back order and the contractor is still awaiting the units. Two additional light speakers are neded to finish the job and they have been on order since Dec. 8.

The Lexan panels have all been installed, Robbins said. The blowers are in and the time clocks are installed but are not yet connected, he reported.

Until the light/speaker fixtures are in, completion of the job is stalled. Robbins estimated it will take four hours to complete the construction.

Wompatuck transformers

Prompted by a question posed by water commissioner Ronald Goodwin, a spokesman for Congressman Gerry Studds has been informed that all PCB transformers have been removed from Wompatuck State Park.

Bob Nickerson, South Shore representative for Congressman Studds, said that in response to a question from Goodwin, his office investigated the whereabouts of the transformers. Bob Nicoloro, manager for hazardous waste at Fort Devens, told Nickerson that all PCB transformers were removed from their sites to a holding building until disposition contracts were arranged.

These contracts, according to Nicoloro, took place and were completed prior to the summer of 1986. The transformers that are presently still on the property are clearly labeled as non-PCB types. They will eventually be disposed of by the US Army and are presently no threat to the environment, Nickerson stated in a letter to Benjamin Curley, water department supervisor.

Gjesteby attends conference

Martha K. Gjesteby, MAPC Treasurer and representative for the town of Cohasset, attended the National Association of Regional Council's (NARC) 1987 Washington Policy Conference on Feb. 2-4, in Washington D.C. More than 800 local and regional officials from across the country convened to explore federal, state, and local policies and issues facing local governments.

The meeting provided an opportunity for Gjesteby and other regional council members to exchange information and to express their views directly to the Massachusetts Congressional delegation and Administration officials. Gjesteby and other MAPC officers and Executive Director David C. Soule met with State Representative Barney Frank (D), requesting his continued support of environmental and other bills of special interest to the metropolitan Boston region.

As an appointed member of the special NARC Human & Economic Services Legislative Committee, Martha Gjesteby attended a workshop reviewing future legislative initiatives on that subject, and endorsed the subcommittee's short-term policy to secure passage of legislation within the existing network on aging of the Area Agencies and State Units on Aging.

She attended several workshops which reviewed upcoming federal and state initiatives expected to impact local governments in the months ahead, as well as workshops outlining water, air, and groundwater issues facing the 100th Congress for which MAPC and other regional councils nationwide will have a major stake.

Police pay ruled legal

The town's special labor counsel ruled last week that the town is not committing perjury in providing hourly pay rates for the police prosecutor and detective.

Atty. Robert Garrett, citing several court cases in which similar situations were ruled legal, said the town may continue to pay the police department's court prosecutor and detective on an hour rate. Police Sgt. Richard Barrow filed a written complaint to selectmen last month, alleging that the town was committing perjury by paying the two officers per hour rather than by a weekly salary base.

Bildners' staff member Dean Piacentini helps Sarah Prockter scoop some batter into the cupcake tins during a first grade field trip to the store last week.
(Kathy Perlow)

According to Police Chief Joseph Kealey, the attorney wrote in his statement to selectmen Feb. 4, "there has been a longstanding practice over a number of years during which the Court Prosecutor and the Detective have had their $500 stipends factored into their hourly rates of pay."

Atty. Garrett recommended that if Sgt. Barrow wishes to pursue the matter with the union, "he may urge his union to negotiate a different result in the next round of negotiations."

Health board may require no-smoking areas

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The health board is considering new regulations to clear the air in town buildings and local restaurants.

If the regulations are adopted, no-smoking areas will be required "in all restaurants having at least one seat," according to Dr. Joseph Godzik, Cohasset's health agent.

Furthermore, town workers wishing to light up will have to request permission from their department heads or school principals, who would then designate smoking areas for their employees. Smoking also would be prohibited during meetings of municipal boards and committees governed by the open meeting law.

At present, police officers who smoke, do not do so in public areas of the police station, according to Sgt. Richard Pomerico. A special room has been set aside for officers who smoke.

Cohasset firefighters who like to light up, however, presently can smoke almost anywhere in the fire station.

Firefighter Peter Trask said he plans to "bring up the idea of having a non-smoking fire station" at a union meeting. He added he was glad to hear of the health board's proposed regulations, and that such a move would be "fine by me."

The health board cited the Surgeon General's report of December, 1986, which has "established that second hand smoke is a threat to the public health," as rationale for considering the regulations.

"The regulations are designed to protect the public health and the quality of life of Cohasset residents," the board said.

If accepted, each Cohasset restaurant will have to set aside at least 25 percent of its seating capacity for non-smokers.

Restaurant owners would be forced to post signs, direct patrons seated in a non-smoking area to refrain from smoking, and arrange seating so existing physical barriers and ventilation systems minimize the effects of smoking in a smoking area upon persons in an adjacent non-smoking area.

According to the board, any restaurateur who permits smoking in a designated non-smoking area shall be subject to a fine of not less than $25 or no more than $100 per offense."

Furthermore, the willful failure of the restaurateur to comply with any provisions of the regulations would be subject to a fine of up to $200 for each day of noncompliance and/or suspension of any license issued by the board of health.

A number of restaurateurs in town already have smoking sections in their establishments, and would not be affected by the adoption of smoking regulations.

Judith Kulturides of the Log & Line said she and her husband added a non-smoking area two years ago at the request of their customers.

"All the non-smokers are thrilled," she said. "It's a very popular area."

Those whose restaurants do not provide separate accommodations for non-smokers, were surprised to learn of the proposed regulations, but said they could adjust.

Francis Coffey, owner of The Red Lion Inn, said he is a non-smoker himself and "can appreciate" the health board's concern.

If the regulations are adopted, he said, there is a separate room at the inn, which could be designated a no-smoking area.

What used to be called "The Lion's Den Lounge," Coffey said, "is not the most popular part of the restaurant; everyone wants to eat by the fireplace in the main dining hall." But the room "easily would comprise" the 25 percent of capacity which would have to be set aside for non-smokers.

"I don't get any requests for non-smoking," he added; "most of my customers are regulars.

"It's an interesting question," he said. "Maybe I should start asking my customers what they think."

Jeff Jorgenson, acting manager at With Richard noted, "It would be no problem to set up a non-smoking area."

"We very rarely get a request for no smoking," he added, "but once in a while someone will complain about a pipe or cigar."

Bars and lounges, primarily devoted to the purchase and consumption of alcoholic beverages would be exempted from these regulations, the board said, provided they are located in a separate room or have some physical barrier between the dining room and bar/lounge area.

Godzik explained, "Bars generally aren't included under such regulations; it's a different atmosphere. I'm not exactly sure why, but there's not much precedent; it's probably just social, or political pressure."

The smoking prohibition also would not apply in cases in which an entire room or hall is used for a private social function and, during the course of the function, is not subject to the full control of the proprietor or person in charge.

Restaurateurs may seek variances from the board from some provisions of these regulations, if they feel enforcement would be a "manifest injustice."

The board has scheduled a hearing regarding the smoking regulations for Feb. 23.

PSO program presents Degas to students

The Cohasset PSO (Parent School Organization) "Artist-of-the-Month" program has been successfully introduced to first, second and third graders at the Joseph Osgood School.

Last week, with the help of PSO-trained volunteer mothers: Lee Jenkins, Peggy Corrigan, Martha Equi, Sue McNamara, Dee Dee Nicynski, Joanne Bozne, Sarah Pease, Connie Afshar, Retta Dwyer, Gail Whitehouse, Monica McKenney; Osgood students were introduced to Edgar Degas, the famous French impressionist painter.

Degas is best known for his paintings of people in public, unguarded moments — dancers in motion. The children were encouraged to simulate a Degas drawing and had great fun doing so — although the dust from the pastel chalk was a great "blowing" temptation.

Elementary art teacher, Jean O'Malley, was impressed with the creativity, inspired by this program, in her young artists.

Yankee Cos. may sell subsidiary bank

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

By next month, officials at Yankee Cos. in Cohasset will decide whether to sell its subsidiary, Yankee Bank for Finance and Savings.

A spokesman for Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette Securities Corp., one of two firms handling the possible restructure or sale of the bank, said the decision whether to sell the bank will be made after a March 9 deadline.

Yankee Cos., which also operates an oil and gas subsidiary, is based in Cohasset. The president and chief executive officer of Yankee Cos., and director of Yankee Bank is Paul Montle of Hingham.

According to Wendy Lane of Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette, Yankee is exploring the possibility of the sale of the bank, or a restructure. When Yankee Cos. bought the bank in May, 1984, it was assumed that it would counter the up and down trends of the oil and gas exploration business. But with the decline in prices, the assumption did not materialize, she said, and it made sense for the company to explore a sale of the newer subsidiary.

Along with Citicorp Investment Bank of New York, DLJ has been contacting possible investors and purchasers. The process, Lane said, will be concluded by March 9. Based on the recommendations made by the two investment firms, and the "indications we've received and what is most feasible," a decision will be reached on whether to sell or restructure. "We have to decide together what will maximize the shareholders' value," Lane stated.

Atty. Kevin Donnelly, vice president and general counsel for Yankee Cos., said the two investment firms were hired by the Cohasset-based company about two weeks ago. The firms, he confirmed, are investigating the sale or part or all of the company's bank.

"Informational materials have been mailed to institutions and other investors which are designed to solicit indications of interest from perspective purchasers," he stated. The mailings were completed last week.

The decision whether to sell Yankee Bank will be made by Yankee Cos. in conjunction with the two New York-based investment firms.

Yankee Cos. bought the bank in May, 1984 for $13 million. By the end of 1986 its book value was $31.5 million with $618 million in total assets.

The bank earned $6 million in revenues last year, which was up from a $4 million operating loss in fiscal 1985.

they're no good for the dump at all.

"The biggest problem I've had in my 18 years working here," he said, "is with cardboard and newspaper. Cardboard is public enemy number one."

He explained, only a small percentage of the 1,200 people who go to the dump every week recycle.

"People have to be taught to recycle," he said. "It's not the law, but if we want to preserve what we have here, if we want to extend the life of the dump, people have to recycle."

While the recyclers do their part, Laugelle, his assistant and two part-time employees work to per month at an annual cost of $74,000.

The process has kept the disposal area in good shape and has left the neighborhood clean.

"This is probably the only dump around with no rodents," Laugelle said proudly. "I haven't seen a rat here in years."

When the dump finally runs out of room in 1998 or so, it will be capped, loamed, seeded and closed. But Laugelle has come up with an idea to use the landfill site to solve another town problem.

"They could put 10 or 15 feet of fill up there and use it for a cemetery," he said. "That's probably the only use it would ever be good for; who would want to build on top of a dump?"

Bound Brook Co-op showcases area's artists

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It is nestled away from the state highway; it's location signaled only by a diminutive sign on the grassy edge of Rte. 3A.

And although the Bound Brook Artisans Co-op includes only three rooms, it features some of the highest-quality work from the finest artists in this area.

The Bound Brook gift shop, located in Cohasset next to the wooded area adjacent to Spensley Chevrolet, is the culmination of the work and effort of many craftsmen and artists. Together, they create the wares to be sold within their shop, and individually they maintain the store as its employees.

But, according to member Cynde Hall of Scituate, the Bound Brook Co-op is more than that. It is a store that contains only the highest-quality artwork, at prices much lower than other gift shops and speciality stores.

All the artists, she explained, work at home. That is a big advantage to young women with small children. The only commitment to the shop is a $25 monthly maintenance fee and the assurance of one-day's staffing. In return, the artists are given 100 percent of the price of their merchandise once the item is sold.

This is far different, Hall explained, than most consignment shops where the artist is given a percentage of the sale price. Another advantge, she stated, is the "constant support and encouragement given by the 35 members to each other." Constructive criticism is given to the participating artists, with time to encourage individuals to seek new methods or materials.

Member Bonnie Borden of South Weymouth recalled that she was recently urged to attempt watercolors, although she had never before painted. A silkscreener, Borden decided to try painting and now several of her still life scenes are displayed in the store.

Membership requires that all work by new artists be juried by five members of the co-op, including at least one expert in the particular medium. All work is thoroughly checked to ensure the shop's highest standard of quality.

"In fact," Borden recalled, "just recently one of my sweatshirts I had painted had a little spot on it, and they told me I couldn't sell it here. I hadn't even noticed the spot, otherwise I would have never brought it in."

"The main thing we look for," Hall explained, "is extremely good quality and work that is basically all done by hand. The fabrics and materials our artists use are unique."

A quick tour through the bright three-room shop quickly reaffirms the high quality and variety available. The store is not divided by artists or particular craft, but rather a "gift shop" look is achieved through a careful mingling of materials and merchandise.

Nancy Latady of Norwell is a well-known weaver who spins her own wool. At one time, Borden explained, Latady raised her own sheep. The all natural fibers are dyed by hand and woven into brilliantly-colored wool scarves and shawls. Whimsical items such as mug mats, are also made by the Norwell craftsperson.

Scituate's Cynde Hall stands by the display of artwork and crafts at the Bound Brook Artisans Co-op. (Kathy Perlow)

Hall grows a half-acre of wildflowers in her Scituate yard which she later dries and uses in colorful and delicate ornamental wreaths. Porcelain dolls are created in entirety and with perfection by 82 year-old Eleanor Chagnon of Quincy. She pours the molds, paints the faces, and designs the clothing for each precious figure.

"She's an inspiration to us all," Quincy artist Rosemarie Gentile stated.

There are several decorative painters within the shop, all who are encouraged by their Co-op members to attempt new creations and new designs. "The encouragement we give each other here," Hall explained, "we wouldn't really get if we sold our work to a consignment shop. This is different because we all own a piece of the shop and we want each other to succeed."

There is a basketmaker who uses no power tools and makes his own greenwood chairs. There are several hand knitters and machine knitters, and a separate room devoted to clothing and items for infants and children. Special orders are taken by the individual artists, whether it's a personalized ornament for a child's wall, a cotton sweater, a hand-sewn quilt or a pair of woolen mittens. One of the featured knitters for babies and childrens' clothing is Linda Wojtasinski, a Hingham teacher.

Janice Loring, also of Hingham, is an experienced English smocker. Her work is included in a variety of childrens' clothing including dresses and bibs.

There are wall artists, such as Marie Peters who does silkscreening and monotypes. One of her works

State finally approves Cohasset sewer plan. . .

The plan would allow Cohasset to dump a maximum of 300,000 gallons each day into the Hull treatment plant. That amount, DeSantis explained, is far more than Cohasset's daily flow, but it includes possible building expansion in the future. The current wastewater flow into the Cohasset treatment plant averages 200,000 gallons each day.

The news received from the state this week, is "excellent," according to DeSantis. "This is the best news we've received since June, 1984. This is what we've waiting for."

DeSantis was referring to the 1984 annual town meeting when voters approved and appropriated $1.95 million for the Ward Engineering plan. At that town meeting, an amendment was added to the plan which included the sewering of the Rte. 3A business zone and the Ledgewood area of town. Although the plan was later rejected by the state, and federal funding was drastically reduced, those two sections were again added to the revised plan submitted to the state last month.

According to DeSantis, this week's notification from the state "is actually more significant than town meeting's acceptance of the Ward plan back in June of 1984. This is the plan we know is acceptable to the state and they have told us that."

He continued, "I'm still convinced this is the way to go if we want to service this town for the future. As far as the environmental problems of the Hillside and Veterans area are concerned, this plan solves them. It's sad we lost the advantages of our funding. But with this plan, the town can control its future because we are sewering just the most intensively devloped areas."

DeSantis noted that although "it's not over 'till it's over," he predicted an intermunicipal agreement with Hull could realistically be completed by March 2 or earlier. A meeting between the engineers for the two towns are scheduled to meet this month, DeSantis said, to iron out further technical aspects of the proposal.

"Speaking for myself," the commission chairman said, "I have no doubt the agreement will be approved by March 2."

The inclusion of Rte. 3A and the Ledgewood area was a big factor, DeSantis said, in obtaining the state's preliminary approval of the sewer plan. Although added to the plan at the September, 1984 town meeting, it was later excluded when the town lost its appeal of the state's rejection of the Ward plan. The commission decided to include only those areas that were most urgently in need of sewering and those streets the town could afford to sewer. Rather than a 94 percent funding level, DeSantis explained, "we were now talking about 40-50 percent funding" for the project.

In the latest amendment to the sewer plan, Rte. 3A and Ledgwood were included as the third phase of the project. The Hillside, the Veterans area and the harbor are to be sewered in the first phase, with the Deer Hill School and Old Pasture Road area to be included in the second phase. The addition of Rte.3A and Ledgewood will require a two-thirds vote of approval from town meeting in Cohasset and in Hull.

The original sewer treatment plan approved by the town was the project proposed by Metcalf and Eddy. That plan which was divided into three parts, would cost the town about $5 million for the first phase, which include construction of a central sewer treatment facility. The Metcalf and Eddy plan called for the sewering of 48 percent of the town.

The Ward facility plan, which will cost the town about $1.2 million for the first phase, will sewer about 25 percent of the town. That first phase of the project will include design and construction of the interconnecting eight-inch pipe between the Hull treatment facility and Cohasset, converting the Cohasset plant into a pumping station, and constructing sewer lines to the streets listed in that first phase.

DWPC chief engineer Paul Taurasi noted that the intermunicipal agreement between Cohasset and Hull is "of prime importance in this entire process," and requested that a status report be submitted to the state by March 2.

recently won second prize at the Duxbury Art Show along with Mary Barnes of Plymouth. There are potters, including Patty Rusconi of South Weymouth.

Co-op member Hall, who was introduced to the store several years ago by her mother-in-law, Alice Hall of Cohasset, said the store is the best of all worlds.

"We have the best quality right here in one shop," she explained, "and we sell it at competitive prices. We keep our costs down by running the shop by ourselves, and we attract the best artisans in the area."

The co-op is willing to accept new members who appreciate that operating the gift shop is a "labor of love," Hall explained. "I can honestly say I love everything in this shop. We all love to work, and that hard work shows in the things we have created."

The Bound Brook Artisans Co-op, 813 Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Rte. 3A), is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m.

Simons Greenhouses & Farm Stand
(Now Sea Crest Farms)
Rte. 123, Scituate, MA

Dear Customers, & Friends,

As most of you know by now we have sold our farm and farmstand.

It was a hard decision for Ronnie and I to make. We have worked and owned the farm for twenty-six years.

We want to thank all our customers and friends for the happiness we have all shared.

The new name of the farm will be Sea Crest Farms, Raymond DeVincent and Anthony Inglise are the new proud owners. They also have been in the farming business for many years.

We hope all our customers and friends will still stop off at the farm. Ronnie is doing all the growing for the new owners. Andy & Marie will also be staying on with the new owners.

Later on this summer Ronnie and I are going to move to the Ellsworth, Maine area and start a campground.

We have another goal to meet which we are excited about, but we are so much going to miss all the people we have met over the years. We hope when we get situated that you all will stop by and spend a night with us at our new venture.

Sincerely,
Ronnie & Marie Simons

☐ The Bound Brook Artisans Co-op has some news this week. Two of their members, Marie Peters and Mary Waring Barnes have samples of their work in the Duxbury Art Association Juried Show that runs from Jan. 22nd to March 15th. In addition, Marie Peters won 2nd prize in prints for her monotype work. That prize work will also be seen at the Stonehill College Print Guild Show to be held in March. If you can't get to either place, their work can also be seen at Bound Brook Artisans Co-op on Rte. 3A. Why not pop in and see it. You'll be glad you did!

☐ Applause, applause for Joe Becker, another grand CHS grad that continues his fine efforts in sports. Everyone remembers #22 running down the football field for all of those touchdowns, Captain Becker did an admirable job! Well, Joe is Captain again...he has been elected the Captain of the Maine Maritime Football team. Sure would by nice to see him play, but Castine is a long way to go...maybe the team will play a local college, and we'll get to see him in action. Will let you know next fall!

☐ Here's hoping that Sara Froio is all better as this goes to press. She had to have a lot of oral surgery, can you just see it now? Sara unable to talk? Oh dear!!

☐ Congratulations to Jordan MacNeil who was recently installed as a Junior Councilor in the Hingham Chapter, Order of the DeMolay.

☐ At this writing, Dan Pompeo is the high scorer for the South Shore League in hockey. Good work, Dan, keep it up. And, if you haven't seen them, go to the game (time and place to be announced) and watch our hockey team in action.

Mazoe Barkan (l) and Megan Walsh-Connelly enjoy some treats provided by Bildners during a tour of the store last week by Miss Bowker's class.

☐ Have been asked many times, so here is the "scoop". If you wish one of the pictures that are taken by the Mariner photographers that you saw in the newspaper, call the Mariner with your order. Be sure you know the date the picture appeared, the page number and the name of the photographer. When you call, they will fill you in on the rest.

☐ Meredith Deveney, Samantha Platt and Gretchen Pattison are happy gals these days! They are going to participate in the Boston University Saturday Drawing Studio, which is for young artists with good talent.

☐ Speaking of artists, CHS student Dudley Bryan won an honorable mention for the work he entered in the Boston Globe Scholastic Art Awards Show!

☐ We hear that Chip Anderson is really doing well with his swimming. Perhaps we will be reading about him, what with all of the big meets that are coming up...good luck to you Chip, we'll be waiting to see how you do!

☐ Happy to report that Barbara Davenport is feeling so much better! It sure seems as though our little town has had its share of sickness, must be the snow that's carrying in all of these strange germs! Well, at least the days are getting longer, so the end of winter is in sight. Someone should hold a burn the shovel party, it would be well attended!

☐ One wonders if "Calamity" is speaking to any of her not-so-nice friends well wishes for her 40th birthday! That was a clever "ad" and I'm sure that Jane loved it!

Presidential salesmen

How many of you paused even briefly in your daily pursuits to honor George Washington or Abraham Lincoln or any other president last Monday?

That few of you, eh.

It was Presidents Day, you know, the Monday between Lincoln's birthday (Feb. 12) and Washington's birthday (Feb. 22), when both natal days are stuffed jointly into a long weekend for official observance, presumably to save time.

How many of you trotted down to an automobile showroom Monday to look over the latest Subarus, the Volvos, the Volkswagens or the Hyundais? (Don't they make cars in America anymore?)

That many of you, eh.

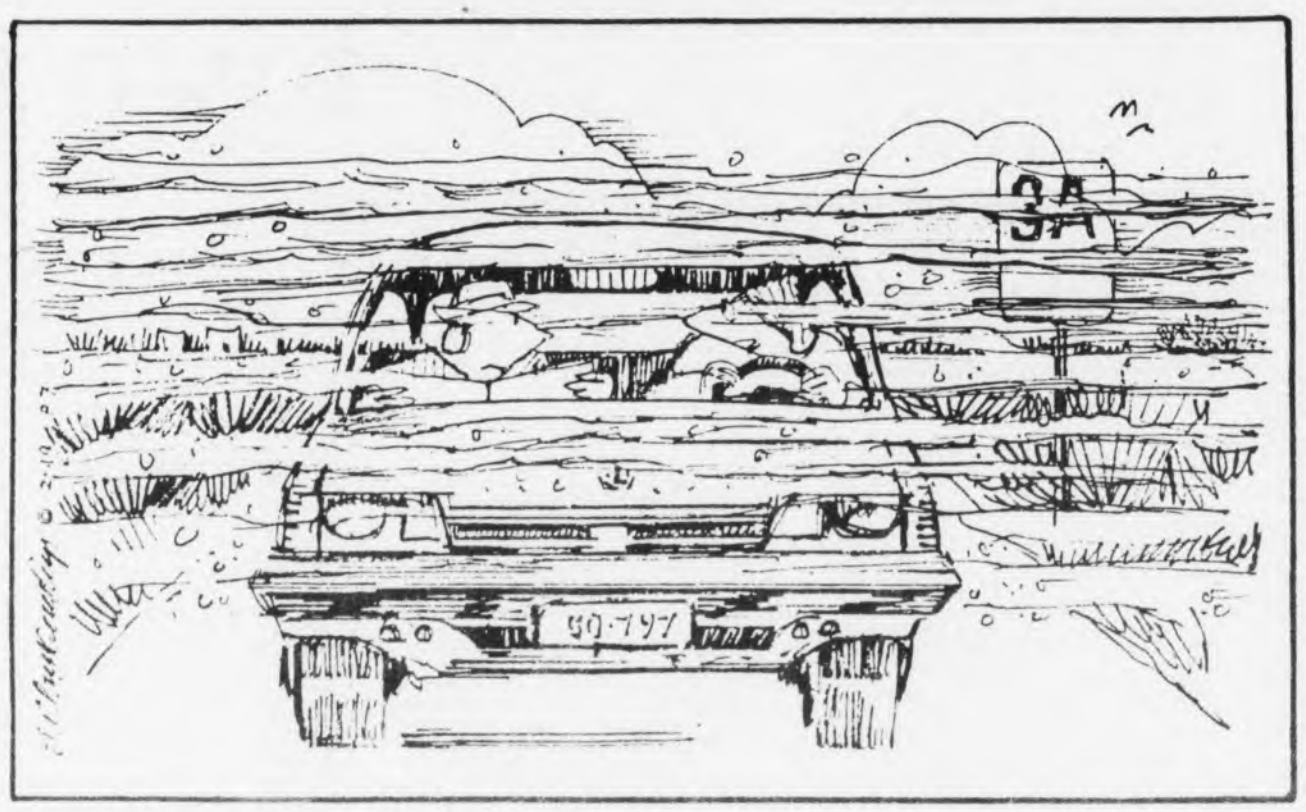
It may have been Presidents Day officially but actually it has become a day to honor Daniel Quirk, Ricky Smith or the Good brothers by looking over the latest models from Tokyo, Seoul, the Rhineland and Detroit.

We wonder what George Washington, whose 255th birthday falls on next Sunday, would have thought had he been able to return to the country he sired to find himself starring in a televison commercial.

You've seen it; the one where George himself, in full military regalia, rides up through the snow (shades of Valley Forge!) dismounts and proceeds to pitch for a new car.

And what of Abe Lincoln, born 178 years ago last Thursday, who now finds himself on camera extolling the virtues of rack and pinion steering and four wheel drive?

Now, we have nothing against selling cars. We buy them ourselves. Some of our best friends are used car salesmen.



But must it be the fate of the Father of his Country and the Great Emancipator, as their lives and times recede farther into the past, to be known to a new generation of Americans as TV pitchmen for autos?

Perhaps it's time to assign the gala weekend of car sales to a more appropriate birthday.

Like Henry Ford's.

Or Ernie Boch's.

Individual efforts boost to the arts

To the Editor:

A whole lot of wonderful things happen when people offer their individual talents and abilities to support the arts. You, Mrs. Editor, were one of these people. Your two-page CHS Art Auction spread including 10 paintings and drawings encouraged art patrons to bid on 21 submissions to the tune of $369.

Dan Leahy, General Manager of Kimballs By-The-Sea, is a most important Arts Booster. Dan not only feeds us well, he serves as our bartender . . . and lends us easles, changes light bulbs, and truly seems to enjoy the entertainment.

Our sound system at the CHS Valentine Cabaret at Kimballs last week was courtesy of Horizon Video. Thanks, John C. And our raffle items (hand-painted Swedish candlesticks, and a glittery Valentine shirt) were courtesy of a parent, and lots of Glitter of Hingham — thanks Harrie and Marilyn.

Every year patrons are treated to new talents, as students are promoted through the ranks to Senior Chorus. This year sophomore Dan Farwell presented the audience with two Billy Joel numbers, which he both played and sang on the piano. Master of Ceremonies Bryan Marks said Dan has had less than a year of piano lessons.

Celia Mullen, who has had more than one year of piano lessons, served as accompanist for all numbers, and then performed a song which she both played and sang . . . excellently, of course. Other wonderful selections were offered by Vicky Kelley, Mark McMannus, Mary McElroy, Amanda Sweeney, the "Andrew Sisters," the CHS Show Choir, "The Joke Hound," . . . a total of 34 students entertained.

At the end of the Cabaret a surprise duet was performed by Bryan Marks and CHS graduate John Pierra, whom most Cohasset residents will fondly remember as "The Pirate King" of the 1985 All-School Musical. In addition to taking courses at BU, and working at Texaco, John will appear in two upcoming professional plays in Hingham and Brockton this spring. Get your tickets at Olympic Texaco!

A large thank you to all 112 plus patrons who attended the Cabaret and bid so generously on the silent art auction. The net proceeds from the Cabaret were $1,100. $800 will defray costs of the CHS Chorus' trip to Disney World this April. And $300 will defray publication costs of the 1987 CHS literary/arts magazine, "Whispers and Shadows."

Final thanks must go to Bryan Marks, CHS Choral Director, who somehow organizes, produces and moderates this event in spite of several AFS kids flying off to California the afternoon of the Cabaret, various and sundry student illnesses (the flu, etc.). And a big thanks to Colleen Lucas, CHS Art Instructor, whose students' colorful donations were a bright addition to this year's Valentine Cabaret.

Parents and others wishing to assist the boosters with upcoming art events (and there are many) should contact Sue McNamara or Karin Bartow.

Part of Cohasset died with Liberace

Lee Liberace was one of the most popular entertainers ever to play at the South Shore Music Circus. And when he died, part of Cohasset died with him.

"I've been at the circus for 20 years," commented Clark Chatterton of Red Gate Lane, "and I think he had one of, if not the strongest followings around. His shows would always sell out."

Perhaps it was his grandiose musical style, or his even more flamboyant personal style which drew such devoted audiences to Liberace here.

"He had quite a wardrobe," Chatterton said. "That was no lie about what his costumes weighed; he had a fur coat that must have weighed 150 pounds."

Despite his more publicized qualities, Liberace will be remembered at the music circus and around Cohasset for his kindness and generosity. "He would take his group out to dinner and take others with him," Chatterton said. "It was a travelling party.

"I think his entourage was one of the most delightful groups of people to work with."

Liberace played the music circus four or five times, beginning in 1980, and he grew fond of the town during his stays here.

While performing here, he stayed at the Cox Estate (now, Yankee Oil), and shopped for antiques in the village stores.

Liberace's name is listed in Manning's little phone book for the Margin Street mansion. "We still get junk mail for him," Osborne said.

On one of his shopping sprees here, Liberace visited the workshop of Carlo Conte.

Conte's daughter Barbara recalled the visit. "He came to the barn to see my father's miniatures," she said. "and he admired them. He was a lover of the arts," she said, "because he was an artist himself.

"He was very personable, friendly and down to earth," Conte said. "He seemed like an ordinary person. It was nice to know that a man that big was so down to earth."

Liberace showed up in a jogging suit, she recalled. He was not wearing ruffles, fur and huge gems as he did on stage.

The Cohasset artisan created a miniature bedroom set for Liberace. "He was a collector of art," Conte said.

Finalizing the town sewer plan

Sewer board chairman DeSantis issues pleasing report

The Sewer Commissioners are extremely gratified by Paul Taurasi's letter of February 13, 1987. This letter signifies that Cohasset and the State have reached agreement on a waste water disposal plan for Cohasset.

Now, the Cohasset Sewer Commission and the Hull Permanent Sewer Commission must finalize ther Intermunicipal Agreement (IMA) for approval by the respective Town Meetings. Speaking for the Cohasset Sewer Commission, I can report that both towns have made substantial progress on this document. I am confident that by March 2, 1987 the two sewer commissions will be able to issue a joint report to the State indicating further progress on most of the outstanding contractual points and that both parties will continue to work diligently to finalize the document prior to our Annual Town Meetings.

I wish to emphasize that the major hurdles in our path have now been cleared. The Sewer Commissioners will make every effort to ensure that the project will commence early in the new fiscal year.

The recent agreement reached between the State and Cohasset makes an excellent reason for a review of what is included in this project, what has been added, and what does the project cost us?

First a brief history:

-Town meeting on June 19, 1984 approves Ward Plan and authorizes the appropriation of funds for its design and construction.

-July 1984 the State rejects the Ward Plan.

-August 1984 the Town appeals the State rejection to the EPA.

-June 1985 the EPA makes the determination on Cohasset's appeal. To wit: State is allowed to assign priority ratings to separate parts of the plan. By so doing State is able to deny funding of the on-site rehabilitation program. EPA agrees with the State, not withstanding the preponderance of evidence to the contrary including the funding by both the EPA and the State for the Williamstown small diameter sewer service area, to deny 94% funding for our collectors because Cohasset does not qualify as a "small community." Most significantly, the EPA in its appeal determination rules that. . ."Cohasset had found an alternative substantially less expensive than the alternative recommended by its facilities plan,"(the former M & E Plan) and "that Cohasset's rigorous effort to achieve the most cost effective alternative, and to impress upon the Commonwealth and EPA that it is so doing so, is not only appropriate, but is in fact required by the Statutes and Regulations."

-November 1985 Town and State agree to seek a mutually acceptable plan.

-February 13, 1987 Cohasset and the State reach agreement!

What is Included in the Project?

1. Conversion of present treatment plant to a pumping station and construction of an eight-inch pipeline to the Hull treatment plant.

2. Expansion of our present sewer service area in two phases of construction five years apart.

3. Town-Homeowner funded on-site rehabilitation project for homes outside of sewer service areas.

Society meetings

The Cohasset Historical Society, initiating a new series of regular evening programs for members and guests, has scheduled two events to be held in March and April.

Wednesday, March 11, Society members are invited to a joint meeting with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce to hear a special talk by John Coles, authority on the subject of antique buildings and early houses. Details regarding time and place will follow soon.

April 21, also a Tuesday, the Society will hold its spring dinner meeting at Trueblood Hall of the Unitarian Parish House. On that evening a catered dinner at 6:30 p.m. will be followed by a talk given by Dr. William Fowler of Northeastern University's Department of History. Prof. Fowler's talk is titled "To Form A More Perfect Union", having as its subject the writing of the United States Constitution in 1787 at Philadelphia. This year marks the Bicentennial of the drafting and signing of our nation's Constitution, and the Cohasset Historical Society will participate in the nationwide observance of its Bicentennial. Prof. Fowler is a recognized authority on the subject of the Constitution, and delivered this talk recently before the Hingham Historical Society, where it was acclaimed by those who attended.

More details relating to the Cohasset Historical Society's forthcoming program of meetings will be announced soon.

Coward's "Present Laughter"

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present its winter season Town Hall production, Noel Coward's 1940's English comedy "Present Laughter" on two forthcoming weekends.

Performance dates are Friday and Saturday, Feb. 27 and 28, and March 6 and 7. The Saturday, March 7 performance will be a benefit for the South Shore Region of the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Head Injury Foundation.

Directing the production of "Present Laughter" is Hingham's Judy Holmes. Cast members include Cohasset Dramatic Club veterans John Kuhn, Joan Scorgie, David Barrett, Ellen Kelly, Ginny Barcomb, Scott Ketchum, and Sarah DeLima. Newcomers to the Town Hall stage Gregory Bouchard and Bob Kilbourn round out the talented cast. Stage settings are designed by Arthur Johnsen.

Tickets for the Dramatic Club's Feb. 27, 28 and March 6 performances will be available at the times of the show, or in advance at Fleming's, Cohasset Center. Ticket price is $4, and curtain time will be 8 p.m.

The forthcoming production of the popular "Present Laughter" marks the mid-point of the Cohasset Dramatic Club's 66th season of Town Hall shows, a record which distinguishes the club as being among the oldest community theaters in the South Shore area.

As an antidote to one of New England's long and frosty winters, of just for an entertaining evening of humorous theater, plan to see Noel Coward's "Present Laughter" offered on the historic Town Hall stage by the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

Dance for fun and fitness

Beginning March 3, Dancing Aerobic Workout will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays, 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. and Saturday mornings from 8 to 9 a.m. through April 16. This seven-week session will be held at the Old Ship Parish House at 107 Main Street in Hingham Square.

The fee for 14 workouts (two per week) will be $40; for 20 workouts, or three per week, $50. For six Saturday mornings (no classes the day before Easter) the fee will be $15.

This dancing program offers a true aerobic workout for all ages. Each session combines safe, balanced exercise movements and dance for an all-over, self-adjusting workout that is easy, fun and invigorating—promoting measurable cardiovascular improvement and increased stamina. Side benefits include muscle toning, shaping and strength along with extra calorie burning.

For more information or to register contact Barbara Valovic, instructor at 749-6067.

Glastonbury auction

The Fourth Annual Glastonbury Abbey Auction will be held April 4. The auction will take place at the Hingham Armory on Central Street and will follow the same format as our previous auctions: Silent Auction in the afternoon and Live Auction in the evening. All the proceeds of the event are given to the monks of Glastonbury Abbey for the support of the monastery.

Glastonbury is a unique blessing for the people of the South Shore. It is a source of many tangible and intangible benefits to the people in the nearby communities and to all who are able to visit. The Lincoln School Apartments for the elderly and disabled provide a very visible sign of the Abbey's commitment to the local communities. Another visible and essential commitment is the welcome that the monks assure the men and women who come to spend a few days of rest and retreat with them. Retreatants include clergy and laypersons of all backgrounds: the executive experiencing stress, women and men with their life together as well as those who feelit coming apart. Less visible signs happen daily in the lives of the individuals who seek out the monks for guidance and spiritual counsel; who spend a few quiet moments in the Abbey Chapel or a gentle moment walking the grounds. Some groups with special needs also are welcomed by the monastic community as visitors and guests.

The Abbey invites suggestions of items that would arouse interest at the auction.

Breast cancer screening

South Shore Hospital's Cancer Management Program and the American Cancer Society will host a free screening clinic, for the detection of breast cancer in women on Thursday, Feb. 26 from 2 to 8 p.m. in the hospital's ambulatory care unit.

The program will include a screening clinic by the hospital's medical/surgical staff, a movie on Self Breast Examinations and literature from the American Cancer Society. "Betsy", the anatomical model, and her friends, the Reach-to-Recovery volunteers, will also be there to help out.

For an appointment or more information, please contact Jean Smith at 337-7011, ext. 690. Women are encouraged to phone for appointments for the best possible service.

"Hub's top savings rate: 6.25%"
—The Boston Herald September 5, 1986

At a time when other banks are actually reducing rates, a passbook savings account that pays more than most money market accounts is big news:

The Hibernia Savings Bank now pays 6.25% on its regular savings accounts. (That's an annual yield of 6.54%, based on continuous compounding.) It takes $100 to open one and you only need to maintain a balance of $10 to earn the rate.

If you like the convenience, safety and simplicity of regular passbook savings —and want rates that are better than most money market accounts — stop by and open an account with Hibernia.

It will be good news for both of us.

Church School: The teachers and children would like to extend a friendly welcome to three new members: Jennifer and Christopher Kamel, and Allison Ritts. I hope everyone will enjoy the bulletin board in Bates Hall created by Mr. and Mrs. Kirk's fifth grade class.

Youth News: Confirmation class had made some changes. First of all, their meetings will be held on Thursdays (beginning 2/12) from 6 to 7 p.m. in the Pastor's Study. They will also begin doing some fellowship and stewardship kinds of things. On Sunday mornings, instead of class, they are expected in worship (at least as often as possible!). For the seventh graders (not in confirmation), you will be joining us on the activities—watch the mails!

Confirmation Sunday, when these 13 eighth through tenth graders will be joining church, will be celebrated on April 12, also Palm Sunday.

Senior Highs (eleventh-twelfth graders) will have get togethers every other week or so.

Needed: The donation of a used Apple II (e or c) computer for use in the office until research on what is required to meet our needs is complete (possibly mid-summer). If your office or home is upgrading, this is a great opportunity to be of service to your church's more effective ministry! Do call the office if you can help or have any leads.

New members to be taken in during worship on Sunday, March 1. If you have interest (or know of someone who might) please contact the church office right away. We will conduct an orientation meeting for those who join on March 1, those interested in future membership and the confirmation class sometime in early April.

Senior Citizen news. . .

From the Director:

February has been designated 'American Heart Month' by the American Heart Association. Did you know that back in the days of Ancient Egypt—people believed that there was a direct line between the heart and the left hand ring finger. Wearing a wedding ring meant that the heart was connected for lifetime.

Today, we know that there is a link between good healthy heart and a lifetime of healthly habits.

Even small changes in your lifestyle can make a big difference to your heart. Old habits are hard to break, but by eliminating just a few of them, you can greatly reduce your risk of heart attack. So where do you begin—First, quit smoking. Don't get discouraged if it takes a few tries-most people have four or five false starts before kicking the habit for good. For lunch, try a turkey sandwich instead of fried foods or luncheon meats, it's lower in cholesterol and sodium. Take a good long walk. Half-an-hour of walking or other exercise, three times a week, does wonders for your cardiovascular system. It also helps to relieve tension. Sign up for a Health promotion course, Cooking for a Healthy Heart, Freedom from smoking or Stress Management—this will get you off to a great start!!!

Candidates Corner

Burt Pratt throws his hat into the selectmen's ring

Burtram J. Pratt, local historian and author and a long-time town official in various elected and appointed offices has announced his candidacy for the Board of Selectmen.

Pratt recently resigned as a member and Chairman of the Board of Registrars, a post he held for four years.

He was twice elected to five year terms on the Planning Board and served as Secretary and Chairman of the Board. Previously he had served on the committee which planned the Veterans' Development on the old Town Farm land off Pond Street, the first such project in Massachusetts.

He is author of "A Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume II," published in 1956. This work, written for the Committee on Town History, is an in-depth study of the political, social, economic and demographic trends in Cohasset during the first half of this century.

Pratt was Chairman of the Cohasset Bicentennial Committee which planned and executed the year-long town birthday celebration in 1970.

In addition to his participation in town government Pratt has been active in many community organizations. He is a member of the Executive Committee and a Director of the Cohasset Historical Society and chaired a committee which planned and directed the restoration of the Lothrop House. He is also a past President and present Director of the Rotary Club and has been designated a Paul Harris Fellow, the highest honor which a Rotarian may receive.

He is a Vice President and Director of South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. Other affiliations include membership in the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Sixty-Plus Club, South Shore Art Center and Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

A Cohasset native, Pratt was employed by the Cohasset Savings Bank shortly after his graduation from Cohasset High School, and remained in that position for five years until he was inducted into the military. He served in the Army for three years, two years in Europe, and later served an additional three years in the Army Reserve at the Boston Army Base.

After war service Pratt worked as an apprentice printer in area shops, worked for the Patriot Ledger for three years as a correspondent and feature writer in Cohasset and Scituate, and handled publicity, public relations and fund raising for the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

Burt Pratt

In 1951 he was employed by New England Art Publishers, Inc. of North Abington, a greeting card distributor, as advertising manager. In 1962 he joined Denison Press, Inc. of Weymouth as an inside salesman, buyer, and estimator, retiring from full time work with this company in 1982. He has since remained in the printing field as a self-employed salesman servicing accounts on the South Shore, and currently maintains an affiliation with Pyramid Printing and Advertising of Weymouth.

"I believe that my forty years, more or less, of seasoning in both the public and private sectors of community life coupled with long experience in printing, advertising, public relations and journalism, make me uniquely qualified to be a selectman," Pratt said. "Service to the community is in my bones," he continued.

Pratt lives at 75 Ripley Road with his wife Helen, a former physical education instructor in the Cohasset school system, and now a real estate salesperson, and his daughter Joy, a senior at Colby College. Their son, Peter, a former Cohasset water commissioner, is now a resident of Somerville where he is Director of the Mayor's Office for Cable Television and Communications.

Residents demand Heights landfill closure

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Angry residents, sick of the stink, demanded the closure of Cohasset Heights landfill at a health board hearing last Thursday.

The Bates Building was packed like a hornets' nest, with Cohasset citizens concerned about the future of their town's water supply and leery of the odors which have been drifting through the area on cold nights.

The residents and board members grilled two GHR engineers on their data from test wells at the privately-owned commercial dump. Monitoring well #9, at the base of the landfill was of particular concern, because increased levels of organic pollution were discovered there.

Board chairman Dr. Michael Bliss called the results "disturbing, from a public health point of view."

Although twice as much leachate as before, is being trucked off the site to a treatment facility in Lawrence, the levels of organics such as: xylene, benzene, toluene, dichloroethene and dichloroethane have increased, some substantially.

For instance, the level of xylene has jumped in three months, from 7.2 parts per billion to 120 parts per billion. Toluene levels increased from 15 parts per billion to 170 parts per billion.

Possible sources, the board hypothesized, include gasoline and industrial solvents.

The citizens expressed concern regarding leachate breakouts from the collection tank, and the fact that the entire landfill does not have a protective liner. Xylene levels have been found as high as 700 parts per billion within the collection tank.

Cohasset Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik tried to put the test results in perspective, noting the suggested maximum level of xylene for drinking water is as high as 630 parts per billion.

However, the board also questioned the accuracy of GHR's tests, saying test numbers showed "great rises and falls" in the level of contaminants.

GHR engineer Dan Ostrye explained, the variation was based on the rises and falls in the water table.

But Water Commissioner Ronald Goodwin argued, "Camp, Dresser & McKee (the board's engineers) says your test results are so erratic, they must have been tested wrong." He recalled an incident during one of the early tests, where a bottle was dropped on the way to the lab.

"We can have accidents too," Ostrye said.

"How come there are wrong (test) dates on your report?" Goodwin asked.

"Typographical errors," Ostrye said.

"That's not good enough," the water commissioner retorted.

Lillian Murray of Margin Street complained about the pungent odors, which are suspected of emanating from the landfill.

"On cold nights, there is a strong garbage smell in the area," she told the board. "I drive to and from Stoughton all the time, and lately, I've been getting oil smells too."

Bliss commented, he has smelled oil in the landfill's vicinity as well.

Air samples presently are being tested at a Lawrence laboratory, Godzik said, and results are due back late this week.The residents continued to press the health board to shut down the dump, saying the contamination is a threat to the town's water supply at Lily Pond.

"We only have one water supply," Murray said. "If we lose Lily Pond, we lose the whole town. You can't truck in water for 8,000 people."

The GHR engineers explained, the effluent from the well found contaminated flows away from the water supply.

Brian Lipsett of Pond Street disagreed, claiming the effluent flows into the Great Swamp, and into the water supply. He called for the landfill's closure.

"In order to shut down the dump," Bliss said, "we need an engineer who will stand up in court and say this may be a threat to the public health; if you can find an engineer who will stand up in court and do that, fine. So far, we haven't."

Lipsett questioned whether the board is enforcing the landfill's May 5 site assignment.

John and Paul Barry, who operate the commercial landfill, Bliss said, have met all the conditions of the site assignment, with the exception of obtaining liability insurance. The landfill's liability, he added, has been covered by a $10 million bond put up by Browning-Ferris Industries.

Another condition of the site assignment, that of the spotter, came under fire from Selectman James Gallagher.

He questioned whether Paul Barry was an appropriate choice for spotter, and asked the operator whether he has noticed any chemicals entering his landfill.

"I haven't heard of any," Barry said. "No one has said they are putting chemicals in."

"You make me confident," Gallagher said sarcastically.

The selectman recommended replacing Barry with a town-hired spotter. "I don't think Mr. Barry is giving the town a fair shake," he said.

Bliss argued, it is in Barry's interest to keep chemicals out of the landfill and he knows the operation of the landfill.

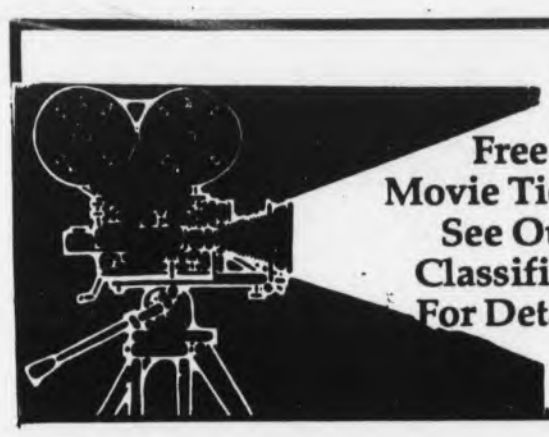
"I don't want hazardous waste up there," Barry said. "I drink the water too."

Lipsett told the board, "You made a decision and they haven't met all the conditions of the site assignment. If you want to shut down the landfill, you can."

Bliss disagreed, saying the board's counsel "doesn't feel we have enough ducks in a row" to shut them down.

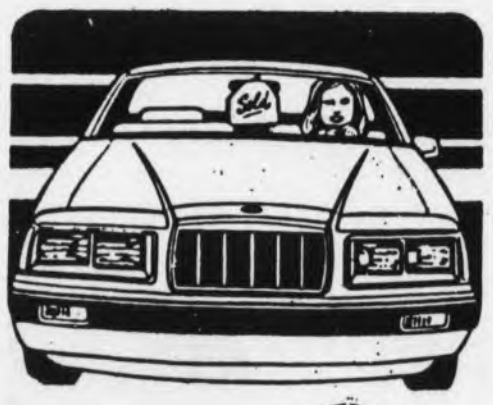
"We could shut them down," he added, "but they would go to court and be open the very next day. We have to have reasonable data, factual data which will stand up in court, that it is a threat to the water supply."

Carlton Howorth of Fairoaks Lane accused the board of being to lax in pursuing such data.



"This is bigger than every other issue in town," he said. "You're not doing enough about this."

Peter Whittemore of Elm Street agreed. "You're not sure whether the O-ring is going to fail," he said; "don't say launch. Don't wait for someone to get cancer."



The board resolved to have samples split and tested by its engineers, in order to determine the accuracy of GHR's testing.

It also ordered the testing of three hand-driven wells in the area of monitoring well #9, to determine the extent of the plume of contamination.

Voke-Tech postpones sex ed program

By Kelly Williams
Mariner Correspondent

The South Shore Regional School committee decided to table a proposed sex education program last week, causing concern among some students and teachers.

"I know it's (sex education) a concern among a lot of students," said Arthur Sheridan, a marine technology student, said. "I hope the school committee understands the seriousness of the issue."

The committee agreed to postpone action on the program until next month after Superintendent Clifford W. Easton requested time to review the proposed sex education courses.

"I'm concerned that there be a balance in what is presented," he said. That's not to say the program should not run. But it will be scrutinized."

Several committee members voiced support for the proposal but agreed it should be carefully reviewed. "This is probably one of the most volatile decisions any committee could make. We are facing problems not unlike other high schools in the area," Hanover committee member Dennis Blackwell said.

"I know we've gone past the sexual revolution of the '60s and '70s, with girls getting pregnant, but an unwanted pregnancy poses such a threat to the student body as whole," he said.

The sex education program, proposed by the school improvement committee, would offer 45 minute courses on contraceptives, responsibility and decision making, and health. The students would have to enroll in at least two of the three courses. Students who volunteer for the program would need signed permission slips from their parents.

The proposal also recommends hiring Health Care of Southeastern Massachusetts in Abington to teach students about contraceptives and sexually related diseases.

Michael Jacobbe, a student member of the improvement committee, told the board sex education is needed at the school because students only get formal sex education "after it's too late."

"Usually, a student won't receive any type of sex education unless there is already a crisis, like a female is pregnant or a male thinks he has gotten someone pregnant," said Jacobbe, a senior from Abington. "Nothing is being done until there's a crisis, and once there is a crisis it's too late."

Jacobbe said the school currently provides no sex education courses to help students avoid those crises. Students now have to go to a guidance counselor or nurse with their problem, who refer them to a family planning clinic.

But Easton said counselors at the school are not supposed to refer students to family planning clinics. "Not at this school they don't. If they do, they're doing it against my wishes. Family Planning was responsible for 53,000 abortions last year."

Easton, a self-proclaimed born-again Christian, said he was not opposed to the sex education program if both sides of the issues were covered in the courses.

But some members of the improvement committee are concerned that the board will pass a watered down version of the program. School teacher Robert Parkis, a member of the improvement committee, said he was concerned that Easton would create a less-effective program.

"We're worried that Easton's religious beliefs will get in the way," he said.

Parkis said a comprehensive sex education course was discussed last year but the board failed to take any action. He explained that most students he's talked to have said they find little value in current sex education courses in the school system.

"Schools say they have sex education courses, but ask kids the value of them and they laugh," Parkis said.

Parkis said he was concerned the school would lose $2,000 in state funds if the school committee failed to make a decision or pass the program by the June 30 deadline.

Paul Bows, chairman of the improvement committee, said the committee agreed to return the funds if the board turns down the program. The improvement committee received $5,410 from the state. Under the Education Reform Act of 1985, the committee receives $10 per student from the state to fund projects outside the school budget. The school's October enrollment was 541 students.

He said $2,000 from the grant was planned for sex education and $1,150 for a drug program. If a program is denied by the school committee, the money for that program must be sent back to the state and the school will lose that money. He said the reason the state makes that requirement is to insure each proposal has been given a lot of thought and research to insure its passage.

Students doodling turns to passion. . .

evil character is Elemental Android; names are bestowed upon each character after long consulation with friends and classmates.

Indeed, Dudley admitted, his friends frequently make suggestions about how specific characters should look, how they should speak, and what names they will be given. One notebook contains profiles of all the Crusher characters. Instantaneously, Dudley can name the origin of each cartoon face.

His best friend, Oronde Bynde of Roxbury, is a seventh grader who often assists in the naming of the Crusher cast members. Oronde, who travels aside Dudley to and from Boston, has "a lot of Dudley's work in my house." He is also an aspiring artist, eager to gain experience and advice from his accomplished friend.

As camera crews, including WSBK cameraman Ed Hettstrom of Cohasset, tried various angles in the artroom last Friday afternoon, Dudley calmly flipped through his notebook of work. He smiled throughout the hectic minutes, and obligingly tied his bootlace when told by the filmcrew to tidy his appearance.

He is, according to his admiring art instructor, "the most extraordinary talent - by far the best cartoonist of any age" she has taught. Dudley is also special, Lucas said, for his "great generosity." Everyone in this school seems to have artwork by Dudley. It's all over the place. People ask him all the time to draw for them, and he's always willing to do it.

"He's also extremely modest. He works constantly and quietly. That's part of his beauty- he is so extraordinary but he rolls right along like everyone else. He wants no special treatment."

The cast of characters stream from Dudley's pen each day as he improves on one, adds another to his list. In addition to his cartoon, Dudley also likes to write poetry. "I have one written in my journal now, and another stuck in my head," he said with a smile. Lucas, who was sitting aside the artist, shook her head and laughed as Dudley produced the little black dairy in which he writes his daily thoughts and poetry. "I never knew you had that," she said with a smile. Lucas added, "I have seen Dudley's poetry before and it's wonderful. He sort of matches the words with his feelings and makes little drawings of the poem. His style is as important as the words in the poem."

Dudley said he would utlimately like to publish Crusher as an on-going comic book series in which he would write all the dialogue and its scenario, and of course, complete the artwork.

Another of Dudley's ideas is already half-finished.

A 1985 photo of Dudley proudly displaying his renowned comic strip, "Crusher." Dudley's work has expanded since the early days of the super hero's adventures.

It is a series of transformer-like robot toys which are based on the Crusher comics and could really be transformed. The designs, magnificently created in black ink on white sketch pads, include "good and evil vehicles" which could be transformed into one big robot. The Crusher characters could fit into their transformable vehicles. Each vehicle would have an individual personality, Dudley explained, "because at one time, they were all alive.

"One day, I'd like to make a bronze mold and pour the plaster in and start making these transformers," he stated.

As he matter-of-factly displayed his sketchings, Dudley noted that he fills at least two entire sketch pads a year. "He goes through more than that," Bynde testified.

WSBK assistant producer Shankin said she was told about Dudley by a staff member at another Boston station. The show she is helping to create is about unusual hobbies by area kids. Shankin soon realized Dudley would be "a perfect addition to our show. He's a regular, average kid with an incredible talent and hobby."

The half-hour childrens' program will include about seven minutes devoted to Dudley and his artwork. Scenes included the CHS classroom, the school bus where he does many of his drawinngs, and his home in Boston.

As the camera and crew members crowded into the artroom to take a closer shot of the young artist, Dudley remained seated, oblivious to the confusion as he studied his drawings.

He looked up, smiled, and answered someone's question. "No, I'm not nervous. I'm okay." Dudley took up a pen and began to work in the midst of confusion surrounding him.

Honorable mention ribbons were given to Tom Lucas of Cohasset for his color work, "Patterns" and to Parker for his piece, "Girls at Harbor."

Jurying the exhibit were John Laurenson, a freelance photographer, artist and teacher; Anita Douthat, curator of the Photographic Resource Center; and Joan Albert, photographer whose work is included in the Modern Museum of Art Collection and who has a piece in a two-year travelling exhibit, "Mothers and Daughters" put together by Aperture.

Both Nelson's exhibit and the juried show are open to the public, Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

For further information, please call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548. The Center is supported in part by a grant from the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities, a state agency.

Deer Hill students update favorite fairy tales

The following stories were written by the members of the sixth grade at the Deer Hill School. This week's stories are updated versions of popular fairy tales and nursery rhymes.

Cinderella's Wedding

A week ago Conderella was busy preparing for her wedding. The big day, March 21, is finally here and the sixth grade paper covered it.

The wedding took place in Prince Charming's palace, in the garden. What a lovely scenery they had. Row after row of various sweet smelling flowers, a path in the middle with a picket fence on each side for the bride to walk through. At the end there is a place for the minister to stand, next to the beautiful bride.

We asked Cinderalla's stepmother what she thought of the wedding. Her reply was ,"I think its wonderful." Her stepsisters said the same thing.

Well enough of that, the wedding had begun. Dum dum da dum, dum dum da dum, dum dum da dum dum da dum dum da dum.

Wow! That's some dress Cinderalla is wearing! It's made of white silk, trimmed with lace, and of course the famous glass slippers.

Cinderalla's mice friends are carrying the veil, and her stepmother is even crying.

Now you have heard about the wedding of the century!

The Cool Bears

Once upon a time, in New York City, there was a cool bear family. The bears just got pizza for lunch, but they were too hot, so they decided to go shopping on Fifth Avenue while it cooled. Also living in New York, was a girl that went by the name of Goldylocks. She was called that because of her bleached blonde hair and perm, but her real name was Vicky.

At the same time that the bears went out, Goldylocks' mom went to the laundromat, so Goldylocks decided to go out for a walk. She was walking down Park Avenue when she smelled the smell of pizza over the smog. The smell got stronger when she came to a huge apartment building. Now she was getting really hungry, so she decided to follow her nose and find the pizza.

She got to the top floor, when she found it. "Way cool, man, this must be my lucky day," she thought. "Like this awesome door is like, unlocked! Now I can get some chow!" and with that, she breakdanced on the floor with joy.

She opened the door and moonwalked over to the stereo and turned on some heavy metal.

Goldylocks danced into the kitchen to find three pizzas, a big one with anchovies, a medium one with cheese, and a regular one with pepperoni. She decided to go for the anchovies. "No one will miss it," she thought. "It's so big!" She took a bite of it and spit it out.

"Grody to the max! This is like gross!" she said.

Then she tried the cheese. She took a bite and spit it out again. "This is wicked pain," she exclaimed.

She finally decided to try the pepperoni. She took a bite. "Mmm! This is like totally awesome!" she said, and gobbled down the whole thing.

After she finished eating, she went into the living room and turned on the TV. There were three Lay-Z-Boy adjustable chairs, a big yellow one, a blue medium chair, and a small red one. First she tried the big yellow one. "This one's like too big!" she said. Then she tried the blue one. "This one's like too hard!" Finally she tried the red one. "Ah! This one's like just perfect!" she said.

She tilted it all the way up, then all the way down, then up, then it stopped. "Oh well, I guess it's broken. I'll have to do something else!" she said.

She went upstairs and went into a big bedroom. Goldylocks found three waterbeds. A big one, a medium one, and small one.

"Oh awesome!" she cried. "I like totally love waterbeds. They're like totally tubular!" she exclaimed.

She dove into the big one. "This one's like way too big. I could do laps on it!" she exclaimed.

She jumped into the next one. "Help! I think I'm going to drown. This one's too mushy!" she said.

Goldylocks got on the small one. "This one's like just right!" she said. Then she got on it and did jumping jacks until she fell asleep.

About fifteen minutes later, the cool bear family finally came home. The Papa bear came in first. "Honey, I didn't know you listened to this kind of stereo music!" the Papa said when he heard the stereo.

"I don't. I hate this kind of music!" the Mama answered.

"It's like the best kind!" said the Little bear.

The awesome dude said, "Did you leave the TV on when we left Honey?"

The awesome dudette answered, "Let's not worry about that right now. After all that shopping, I could eat a jarful of honey on my pizza."

There was a scream from the kitchen. "Oh my God! Honey, when does the maid come? There are chewed up pieces of pizza all over my floor!" The Papa ran into the kitchen. "Someone's been eating my pizza! If I find out who did it, I'll tear 'em to shreds!" he said.

"Someone's been eating mine, too!" said the Mama.

The Little bear said, "Hey man! Someone ate all my pie!"

They went into the livingroom, since they couldn't eat. "Someone's been sitting in my Laz-Y-Boy chair!" growled the Papa bear.

"Someone's been sitting in mine, too!" Mama replied.

"Mama," the Little bear said, as he tugged on his mother's designer jeans. "Someone, like, broke mine!"

The cool Dad snapped back, as he lifted up his sunglasses to make sure.

"Well, why don't we take a nap," said the awesome bear. They went upstairs into the room

"Someone was in my waterbed!" growled Papa.

"Like, mine, too!" said Mama bear.

Just as the Little bear was about to flop onto his bed, he noticed something moved.

"Ah! Someone's still in my bed!"

The Mama bear ran downstairs and called the police, while Papa and Little bear tied her up before she could get away. The police arrested Goldylocks. And she never went into a house without permission again.

Young Boy Flees From Giant

London, England/Scotland Yard - Officials said a giant fell and suffered fatal head injuries today, while chasing a young boy named Jack Robinson.

Chief Inspector Russell reports, Jack stated, "I was on my way to the market to sell our cow, Milky-White, when I met a man who said he would trade Milky-White for some magical beans. The man told me the beans would lead to a fortune."

"Ma didn't believe the beans were magical and threw them out the window in a fit of anger," he stated.

"When I woke this morning, there was beanstalk reaching up to the clouds. I put on my hiking boots and started climbing the stalk. At the top of the beanstalk, on the other side of the clouds, there was a castle."

"While exploring the castle, I found a hen. She told me her owner was a mean giant, who only wanted her for the golden eggs she laid. She asked me to rescure her."

"All of a sudden, the castle rumbled. I tucked the hen under my arm and dashed for the door. The giant was in hot pursuit behind me. I scurried down the beanstalk with the giant a few steps behind me. The weight of the giant tore the beanstalk and the giant crashed to the ground, head first."

Chief Inspector Russell stated, "This is truly a tale that's incredible!"

Numerous Nursery Notables Test Talents at County Contest

Hi! John Donson here at Mother Goose Land, reporting on this incredible star-studded fair. Many of your favorite celebrities from nursery rhymes and fairy tales are here competing in events that they live by. So far three events have gone by. I'll go over and interview the two contestants left from the jumping contest.

"Jack, what was it like being in this contest? You made it clear over the candlestick. Why didn't you come in first?"

"Well, John, I don't know. The cow sure made it over the moon. I think I was nimble and I think I was quick, but I know I made it over that candlestick."

"Thank you, Jack, for your feelings on this . . . uh . . . Let's move on to go speak to the cow! Cow, how did you get so much courage, and how did you develop so much leg strength to jump over the moon?"

"Moooooo!"

"Uh. . . um. . . your. . . uh. . . welcome." The other contestant was abit unfortunate on the jumping contest. His name was Humpty Dumpty. He was one of my favorites and he just had a little accident on the wall.

The next event was the eating contest, and it just so happened that none of the contestants won. Jack Sprat wouldn't eat any fat, his wife would eat no lean, so they just licked the platter clean. And Hansel and Gretel got kicked out because they were eating someone else's property.

The third event was the climbing contest. Jack won on the beanstalk because a giant was chasing him. The Prince came in second climbing up the beautiful Rupunzel's hair. That other contestant was a mouse climbing up a clock. That clock struck one, and it gave the mouse a big fright, and he was carried off on a stretcher because hs had a heart-attack. I'm going to interview Jack the winner.

"Excuse me, Jack. I hope you have a moment to tell me your words of victory."

"Yes, I do, and I'd just like to say thanks everyone for your support, thank you, thank you, for all being here for me, thank you!"

"You are welcome, Jack, and I'm glad you were here for it."

While I was interviewing everyone, an event (the running event) has gone by. Tom Tom the Piper's son had a late entry and he won! The Gingerbread Man came in second place, while our third contestant, Wee Willie Winkey, got lost in the dark some place.

The livestock event is just starting now. Mary and her little lamb are in stall one. The Billy Goats Gruff are taking stalls two, three and four. Little Bo Peep lost her sheep, so she can't compete. Those entries are under the Sheep amd Goats category. The Three Little Pigs are in stalls five, six and seven. Tom Tom the Piper's son is entering an unknown pig and is taking stall eight. Those entries are under the pig category. On the entry sheet there is an entry for Little Boy Blue. He didn't come, so we'll have to go on without him. The judges are judging for the categories. We have a winner for those categories. For the pig category, the third Pig who built his house with bricks, wins! The little lamb of Mary wins in the Sheep and Goats category.

The fair seems to be ending and my time is up. This is John Donson reporting to you from Mother Goose Land.

Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs

Snow White was zooming through the forest when her Honda scooter ran out of gas. "Oh no!" Snowy sobbed, "how will I ever get out of here?"

In the distance the dawrfs sang, "hi ho, hi-ho, it's off to work I go."

"Wait," Snowy cried. The sounds of their babbling was too loud and they did not hear her.

Snowy made an awesome lunch and started to make dinner. Meanwhile, Queenie asked her mirror who was the coolest dude.

"Mirror, this is Queenie, who is the coolest dude in the land, hum?"

"Not you," the mirror replied, "Snow White is."

"You stupid mirror! I always knew Bloomingdales cheated me on this, this wretched hunk of glass."

So Queenie got some hip clothes and went into the forest. "Oh no," Snowy exclaimed when she spied the queen approaching the dwarfs' cottage. "Who are you?" Snowy asked surprised.

"Child, come help an elder."

"Certainly." Snowy got Queenie into the groovy house and let her rest on the couch.

"Child, what is your name?"

"Snow White, but all my friends call me Snowy."

"Snowy, would you like an apple?" Queenie asked.

"Oh yes please," Snowy replied. That was all Snow White remembered.

"Ho-hum,ho-hum, it's home from work we come," sang the seven little men.

"Look," said Doc. "we must get her to Prince MacGyver."

The seven little men toted the stranger to Prince MacGyver, the local hero.

"Hi-ho,hi-ho, it's off to MacGyver we go," they chanted as they toted.

"Ta-da. Here I am mates," MacGyver said.

Each of the seven jumped to attention as the hero apprached from behind.

"What seems to be the trouble here?" he quizzed them.

"We found the lovely woman in our cottage. Can you dig it?" they all spoke at once.

"I can dig it," he replied, "it looks like the work of the Queen down the street." He assumed correctly and knew the only way to awaken her was one of his locally famous kisses. He had removed other trances with his kiss.

He kissed the sleeping woman and stepped back when the fireworks went off. He knew that this would happen. It always did.

"Wow," Snowy shouted as she opened her sleepy eyes. "Please tell me what has happened to me," she quizzed all that were present.

"It wasn't any great task," MacGyver noted as he walked proudly from the scene.

"All I can remember is one bite from the apple that Queenie gave me," she mumbled.

Snowy and MacGyver, accompanied by the dwarfs confronted Queenie at her place. Her response was, "I only acted in that way because I was told by this wretched mirror that I wasn't the coolest dude. I was jealous and angry."

The palace guards were summoned and they carried the raving queen to a dungeon.

"What do you think will happen to Queenie?" Snowy asked as she was soaking up the rays at Boca Raton. This was the location that her hero had selected as their honeymoon setting.

"Well, she will loose her title, she'll probably stay in the dungeon and worst of all punishments, she will live the rest of her life without her mirror," MacGyver said.

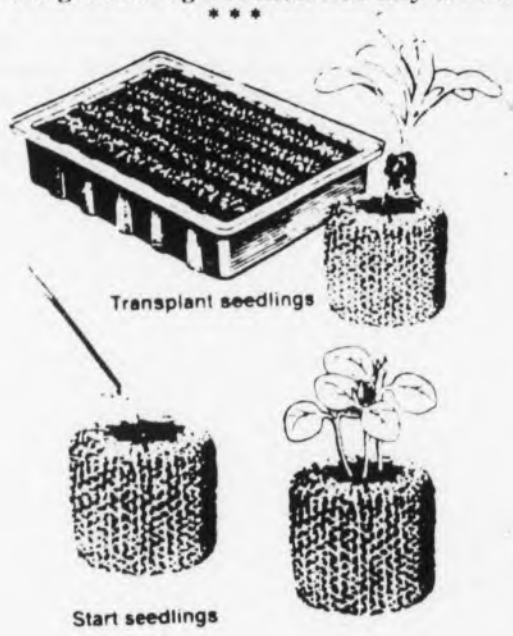
FROM THE GARDEN



by JOAN PINKHAM

Thinking of gardens in capricious February

February is a capricious month with nights that can be colder than December and days that can be surprisingly warm, if and when the sun decides to shine.

Some years the maple sap begins to rise by Washington's Brithday and sometimes the spring floods start in February; something over which neither the groundhog nor man has any control.

Even on the dreariest of days a greenhouse will offer a colorful, sweet-smelling haven. More and more people are finding gardening a year-round hobby and on the sunny side of their homes, glass room additions are sprouting.

Kay Lombard dug up primroses from her cold frame last week and they were brightening up her greenhouse as she went about the chore of washing plant leaves with Murphy's liquid soap to discourage white flies. Her camellias, azaleas and freesias were bright with blossoms and her mini-orange trees fragrant, like the jasmines in Rita Araphoff's greenhouse.

Rita says she has learned through experience that it's best to wait until the first of April to plant seeds, as the resulting plants are sturdier. "Small is better," says Rita. Janet Ingram's kalanchoe and elephant-ear begonia plants are thriving in the full-length living room window that faces the southwest. A weak solution of Peter's plant food encourages the blooms.

Seeding tomatoes

You don't have to go South to brighten up your winter, for camellia blossoms and plants are for sale and on exhibit at the Arnold Arboretum. The annual Camellia Show will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the 21st and 22nd of the month. Further afield is the Worcester Spring Flower Show and Lawn and Garden Expo at the Centrum from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Feb. 26 through March 1.

There's very little Bev Litchfield doesn't know about birds, but she admits to being at a loss when people ask her why we aren't seeing as many birds at our feeders this winter. She does have a few suggestions to offer, such as checking to see if the seeds in the feeder are frozen and keeping an eye out for hawks and cats who may be scaring the birds away. Don't give up, she says, for the birds need your help now that there is so much snow on the ground. There are still all kinds of feed for sale at the Science Center in Norwell which is open each and every day.

Christopher Allen Haskell puts the final touches on his grandfather Allen Haskell's exhibit at the 1987 New England Flower Show, March 14-22 at the Bayside Expo.

Have you ever wondered about the chemical analysis listed on fertilizer packaging? The choice of fertilizer often depends on the kinds of plants you are growing. Vigorous growth and good bloom requires a high analysis, so read the numbers on the label: i.e. 10-15-10. The first number refers to the nitrogen content which promotes leaf and stem strength and stimulates growth. The second applies to phosphorus which gives a steady push to flower and seed production and improves foliage and flower color. The third is potash, which stabilizes growth and intensifies color. The formula, 10-15-10 is a good general one, suitable for almost any plant, but if you are growing a plant such as an African Violet, to induce maximum bloom, try 12-36-14. Foliage plants do well with a fertilizer containing a higher amount of nitrogen (the first number).

Last week the snow plows were still rumbling along, pushing winter aside so traffic could flow almost at summer's pace. The old saying still holds true. Spring will be along in due time, bought and paid for. We have now paid another installment and we hope it will be the last. But, for those who take the time to look, there are signs that spring will soon be along.

The sun is still a slugabed in the morning, but it sets an hour later in the evening. Even against the background of mounds of snow the willows are showing a livening amber color on their slender stems.

The small birds at the feeder pause from time to time to vary their winter twittering with at least a fragment of song. Off in the distance, early in the morning, the chickadees give a whistle, while cardinals, titmice, golden-crowned kinglets, vie with the pigeons, bluejays and squirrels at Bev Litchfield's feeder.

Flocks of robins are in the trees off Cedar Acres Road in Marshfield, while several people have spotted a magnificent snowy owl feeding in the marshes off Rte. 3A at the North River Bridge spanning Scituate and Marshfield.

Air layering

An article in the New York Times urges us to think of the snow as the gardener's friend. So, think positive with every shovelful you take, for the snow cover is nature's blanket, keeping the plants underneath safe, even the foliage of hardy bulbs that were starting to push above ground before the snow. We are told to enjoy the snow on the trees and shrubs and not to whack or brush it off. The woody plants are brittle and the twigs could easily be snapped. When making icy walks, steps and drives safe, use sand, fertilizer, or even cat box filler. The use of salt can be dangerous as it seeps into the root zones of plants. Salt damage will not show up until next summer, when leaves may turn yellow because of damaged roots.

Root cuttings

And now the good news! The flower show is coming to town! A visit to the New England Spring Flower Show has become one of the great Boston traditions. Bonnie Hamilton of the staff so busily making preparations for the nine-day show tells us that the theme this year is "Gardens of the World." More next month about the exhibit which runs from March 14 through the 22nd.

* * *

Now when gardeners are leafing through seed catalogues and planning for this year's blooms and veggies, one of the things taken into consideration is the amount of sun your plants require. So it was that I thought Rosalind Creasy's suggestion very timely. She says that the full moon's shadows at midnight predict where shade will fall at noon six months later. All of which leads me to say that other gardening tips from are readers are always welcome.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

And where sources speak only to the Globe

I just got back from a nine-thousand-mile journey—I will have a full account of Mayor Clint Eastwood's Monterey and other sights next week. I returned to a stack of bills and Boston Globes; and after a pregnant pause decided that on the whole I would rather look at the Globes first.

To my astonishment I found that I had missed the story of the year, namely that it is time to get my morning coat pressed for the imminent inauguration of President Dukakis. For, day after day while I was away the Globe reported: "Dukakis in South Carolina," "Dukakis in Iowa," "How Media Experts Will Package Dukakis," et cetera ad sanitarium.

And what a relief it is to be back in Massachusetts where Lowells speak only to Cabots and sources speak only to the Globe; for in my travels I was in Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Sacramento, Fresno, San Diego, Portland, Spokane, and Bismark, North Dakota long enough to ready daily papers; and in each of those outlandish alleged cities not a single one of the daily rags seems to have heard of the next President!

You get the drift. The Globe is obviously about as objective as the mother watching her son marching in a parade who observed: "Everyone's out-of-step but Johnnie!" The fact is that the Dukakis-for-President movement consists mostly of media consultants, pols who would like to be governor, and, as I would presume, the Globe's editorial page editor Martin Nolan. (At the Globe Nolan could be behind it all: last fall when the Globe's full editorial board voted lopsidedly to endorse George Bachrach for Congress, Nolan directed that the endorsement go to Joe Kennedy.)

The fact is that the Dukakis-for-President "movement" is a long-shot, and neither the governor's credentials nor his national reputation are a fraction of what John F. Kennedy's were in 1959. My guess is Dukakis understands this better than the Globe: the hyping of the candidacy and the failure to report Dukakis' non-recognition west of Mount Greylock is not a reflection on Dukakis, it is a reflection on the Globe.

The Candidacy Itself

What of the candidacy itself? (Poor Dukakis has been getting public advice from pundits like me for months.) I think if Dukakis has any desire to be President, now is the time to make a move. He is at the height of his popularity in Massachusetts, and if he does nothing until 1992 the moment may pass him by.

His problem is that not only is he generally unknown beyond Mount Greylock to the extent that he is known it is among liberal activists already firmly committed to Gov. Cuomo of New York. Moreover, with a single execution Dukakis offers those people nothing that Cuomo does not offer them. Cuomo is better known, a better speaker, represents a bigger state and a bigger ethnic group, and has served in the U.S. Congress. Unless Cuomo pulls his pants down in Grand Central Station or something, he holds the turf Dukakis would have to contest to become a serious candidate. Moreover, if a more conservative 1988 convention rejects the liberal Cuomo on ideological grounds, it is not likely to then turn to the liberal Dukakis but to someone like Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia.

The one advantage Dukakis has over Cuomo is that he is better-liked by his colleagues. There is something about the straightforward, unassuming Dukakis that appeals to other governors and other men who are likely to run for the presidency. Dukakis was very well-thought-of by Walter Mondale, and is likely to have good relations with the next Democratic nominee whoever he is.

The circumstances I just described contain, I think, a viable strategy for Dukakis. He would get creamed in the Iowa caucuses in February, 1988. He would get creamed in the regional Southern Primary later in the spring. And he would get creamed in the California Primary in June. In short, if Dukakis becomes a full-blown candidate for President he will probably get creamed.

But in the Massachusetts Primary, Dukakis would likely be the one doing the creaming. He would stand a very good chance of winning the New Hampshire Primary where regional pride and his opposition to Seabrook make him popular among Democrats. The same factors might make Vermont and Maine worth looking into with the intent of reviving an honorable tradition: the "favorite son."

In short, I believe that although as a full-blown presidential candidate Dukakis would lose decisively, as a regional favorite son he could be successful and could influence the Party without endangering his good relations among Party leaders.

Come a brokered convention Dukakis might actually walk away with the ultimate prize. Or, should Cuomo's candidacy fail and Cuomo himself be unacceptable to the man who beat him, Dukakis would have a fair shot at the vice presidency. Or, should this be evangelist Pat Robertson's year to make us repent, Dukakis-the-regional-favorite-son of 1988 might be in a position to become a full-blown candidate in 1992.

The Home Front

Come any form of presidential candidacy, Dukakis will be watched for signs of letting down on the job here in Massachusetts. Already year-round people down in Chatham are cussing him for not being around when the Atlantic Ocean broke into Old Harbor this winter. In my view that's just cussedness: I don't see Dukakis shirking a job he underwent to win and win back. Moreover, I was delighted with his recent performance at the University of Massachusetts where he met with students who had had themselves a racial incident when the cussed Met won the World Series.

We sadly seem to be in an era when bigotry is regaining a little bit of the veneer of respectability it lost 25 years ago. At the recent meeting Dukakis met with both sides in one room and gently but firmly made it clear that he does not condone bigotry. That sort of performance by a respected public official is what leadership is all about—far more valuable in my view than the constipated affirmative action bureaucracies we have created since the heady days of the Civil Rights Movement.

It therefore should not be overlooked amid all the Globe's hype of Dukakis' presidential campaign that he was there when he should have been. Nor should Dukakis overlook the fact that his opportunity in Massachusetts isn't hype.

The Dragon's Dungeon — by Claire McDonough

And so the tail goes on 'Of Mice and Men'

"I can't believe it," the Dragon roared. "My liberated wife. The one with the raised consciousness. The one who burned her lingerie."

"I couldn't bear to burn it," I reminded him. "I just scorched it a little."

"Nevertheless," he chortled, "the thought was there. "My wife the feminist. The woman who built a shrine to Betty Freidan in the back yard. After she found out the ERA wasn't a new laundry detergent. The diner who complimented the individual who brought our dinner on being an excellent 'waitperson.'

"Who thinks the Declaration of Independence would have been better if it had been written by the Founding Mothers.

"Afraid of a mouse. A poor, timid, tiny beastie who was more afraid of you than you were of him."

"That's what you think," I muttered darkly. "On any terror scale you can think of, I beat that mouse hands or paws down.

"And anyway," I continued defensively, "I wasn't the only one. Everyone in the office was scared. That mouse was a card-carrying terrorist. Julie got up on a chair and wouldn't get down even though she knew she wouldn't be paid for the two hours she stayed there after the office closed.

"And let me tell you something, Bunkie," I added, "Walt Disney lied. Mice do not wear cute little shoes and tee shirts. And they don't sing 'M-I-C-K-E-Y,' either. And if they have girl friends who wear dresses and high heels, I don't want to know about it.

"They have tiny little feet that scurry across the room and give you the creeps. And they peek out at you from behind furniture. And just when you think you've frightened them away and they've gone back into their mouse houses, you look down and see them right next to your foot.

"So okay, so maybe I did yell a little."

"Yell a little!" the Dragon hooted. "I had just called to tell you you had some mail that looked important, and I didn't need the phone to hear you.

"My eardrums may never recover," he added maliciously.

"Look," I told him, "I may have seemed to overreact, but my distaste for mice has nothing to do with feminine squeamishness. It's all based on proven scientific data. Mice carry plague."

He shook his head. "You're thinking of rats. And that was in the fifteenth century. Well, maybe more recent than that, but be honest. Who was the last person you knew who had plague?"

I tried to think of a suitably cutting retort, but failed. Oh, yeah? seemed to lack both wit and elegance.

I tried reason. "Mice are really little rats," I explained. "They don't want you to know that, because they're afraid you could destroy them while they're that small. So they pretend they're a different species. And they hire people to make movies about how cute and loveable and cuddly they are. And they get other people to build enormous amusement parks and resorts where still other people will dress like mice and act charming.

"Some of them bleach themselves white and get jobs in laboratories. Still others hang out in pet stores so kids will buy them and bring them home and scare their mothers to death. But they're really little rats and they're just biding their time. They lull people like you into a sense of false security.

"When enough of you have been taken in, they'll show their true colors, bare their feral, pointy teeth, grow to their full size, and from there on it's Plague City.

"Probably," I added thoughtfully, "the Communists put them up to it. It's too bad the people who produced Amerika weren't aware of the mouse connection. They could have made a series that would strike a chord in the heart of every true patriot. They could have called it Epkot."

The Dragon shook his head. "You're incredible. Let me see if I have this straight. The Communists want to take over America so they're sending plague-ridden mice into our laboratories, our pet shops, and Disney World. Only they really aren't mice. They're baby rats. And you weren't really overreacting. You were sounding the alarm. The thing you really have against mice is that they're Communists. Your quarrel with them is really one of ideology."

"Right," I nodded. "That, and because they're icky."

Historical Society preserves heritage since 1928

By David Wadsworth
Historical Society Curator

First of two parts

The Cohasset Historical Society, a volunteer organization of some 400 members, maintains three old buildings dedicated to preserving and presenting the history of our town. On Elm Street at Cohasset Center the Capt. John Wilson House (Cohasset's first historical museum) is an 1810 Sea Captain's home built by housewright David Nichols for one of the town's early merchant Captains. Next door to the Wilson House is the Society's unique Maritime Museum, an 18th century ship's chandlery and counting house built for the fishing fleet of shipowner Samuel Bates. The Historical Society's ownership of the Wilson House dates from 1936,and of the Maritime Museum from the mid-1950 s. A more recent addition to the Society's holdings, and symbolic of its continued growth, is the Caleb Lothrop House, an 1821 home built by a Cohasset merchant. The Lothrop House is the Society's headquarters, houses its extensive library and archives of local history, and its administrative office. The two museums at Cohasset Center contain large collections of artifacts, artworks and documents relating to the town's general and seafaring history; the Lothrop House is a recreated "house beautiful," replicating a mid-19th century well-to-do Cohasset home with authentic antiques and furnishings.

Since its founding in 1928 the Historical Society has gathered under its protective mantle a truly impressive number of historical times, ranging from early housewright's tools to Indian stone tools, from shipwreck relics and ship models to household furnishings and early gowns. Artworks, prints, old documents and maps relating to Cohasset's history abound in its museums and archives. Each item has a particular and unique story to tell, and each represents a bit of the town's historical heritage as a New England seacoast community and its people.

The motivation to collect and preserve objects from the town's past antedates even the Society's founding in 1928. Before 1900 the municipal Committee on Town History began to accumulate artifacts, maps and documents donated from the old homes of the town, as the committee prepared to write Cohasset's history. The Rev. E. Victor Bigelow's landmark "Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset" was issued by the Committee On Town History in 1898, followed by George and Elizabeth Davenport's "Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset" in 1909. The Committee's first historical collections were stored and exhibited in the Town Hall and the Public Library.,

On July 16, 1929 the original Committee On Town History became the founders of the Cohasset Historical Society. On that date, at the North Main Street home of Dr. Oliver H. Howe, across the street from the town's historic Common, a group of nine of the town's citizens gathered to formally organize and incorporate the new Society. Its first officers were Dr. Howe, President; George W. Collier, Vice President; Charles W. Gammons, Treasurer; and Mary P. Tower, Secretary. A board of nine Directors was chosen. Adopted the same evening was a set of By-Laws which would chart the course of the new Historical Society for years to come; "to develop interest in the history of Cohasset and to preserve information, documents, relics and landmarks relating to the history of the town." Annual membership dues were to be $1, and Life Memberships $50. The Directors were elected for terms of three years, the Officers for one year. Joining with the members of the original Town History Committee at a meeting held on September 17, 1928, were members of the Women's Historical Committee, and both memberships voted to consolidate their efforts within the new Society. By October of that year a membership list of 114 names had been drawn up, representing a cross section of the town's population, and by the end of that month another 20 names were added. Chosen as the Society's first Curator of collections was Miss Charlotte S. Tower, great-aunt of today's Senior Curator. Almost immediately the Society engaged speakers to present talks relating to diverse topics of historical interest. Among the first was a Mr. Tuttle, of the Massachusetts Historical Society, who spoke upon "The Bay Charters and the Early Settlements of Massachusetts." A number of evening meetings followed, devoted to such subjects as "The Development of the Clipper Ship," then talks by Dr. Howe titled "Colonial Lamps and Lighting" and "Early Division of Lands and Early Roads in Cohasset." In June of 1929 members of the Society held a " field meeting" to visit a number of Cohasset's historical sites. By mid 1930 the Society had adopted an official Seal, designed by Mrs. Jerome Wadsworth and her father, Society member Edward Nichols. In April of the following year historian Gilbert S. Tower gave the monthly talk, titled "The Visits of Henry D. Thoreau to Cohasset." September of 1932 saw longtime Cohasset summer resident Ellery H. Clark recount personal experiences in a talk titled "Memories of Coot Shooting In Cohasset." By mid-1935 the Society had established a room at the Town Hall for exhibit of its collections, open to members each day and to the general public each Friday afternoon. In June of that year the Society sponsored an exhibit of maritime objects at the Unitarian Parish House as part of the annual summer carnival at the Common, noted as having been "one of the most interesting features of that event."

1936 saw a major change in the activities of the Historical Society as at the Annual Meeting, June 11, it formally accepted the gift of the old Capt. Wilson House at the Center from William Hamilton McGaw. The Wilson House, for many previous years a tailor's shop run by the Monteiro family, was presented in memory of McGaw's late wife Priscilla Lothrop (Collier) McGaw. Following careful renovations and repairs, the 1810 Cohasset Sea Captain's home was formally opened as the Society's headquarters and museum on September 25, 1937. In that year, Dr. Oliver H. Howe, the Society's President and guiding hand since its inception nine years earlier, retired from office, to be superceded by his son, Dr. Henry F. Howe. At the end of the 1937 season, the Society's Secretary, Miss Mable E. Bowman, recorded that the organization had, in addition to its newly activated headquarters, $167.29 in the bank and was free from debt. The Historical Society has grown from that time to today's much more visible community-based operation. It continues to play a major role in the town whoses history it commemorates.

Art Center donors eligible for gift certificates

Charlotte Hair, Etc. is helping the South Shore Art Center open the doors of their new building in a unique way. Those who make a donation to the Art Center's Capital Campaign through this special offer will also be eligible to win a $250 gift certificate for any of the many beauty services at Charlotte's salon.

For each $5 of gift value to the Capital Campaign, donors will have a chance on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for any of the following at Charlotte's: hair cutting, styling, coloring, perms or conditioning treatments, scalp massage, facials, tanning, manicures, makeup application; or cosmetics, nail and skin care products, gifts or jewelery.

If, for example, a donation of $50 is made, the donor will be entitled to 10 coupons in the drawing. Donations must be accompanied by a raffle coupon or marked "Charlotte's Spring Drawing" (See ad this issue) and be sent to the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset 02025 by March 16. The drawing will be held at Charlotte's on March 20. Those eligible for the drawing need not be present.

Charlotte Phinney, owner of the Stagecoach Way Salon, has watched the Art Center's expansion project take shape from across the Town parking lot. In addition to the aesthetic improvement of the corner now occupied by the emerging two and a half story headquarters for the Center, she is enthusiastic about the potential of the Center's programs and services. "The new Art Center will benefit the whole village and surrounding towns," Phinney says.

For further information on the "First Day of Spring Drawing" for $250 worth of services or products at Charlotte Hair, Etc., call the Art Center, 383-9548, or Charlotte's, 383-0960.

Red-bellied turtle finds a home at the Science Center

By Judy Enright
Mariner Staff

Thirteen little Norwell residents didn't have to wait until the February school vacation to frolic in 80 to 85 degree waters and nibble on red-leafed lettuce.

They spend every day like that, not in the Caribbean but in a glass tank in the cellar of the South Shore Natural Science Center.

The troupe belongs to the Science Center's red-bellied turtle nursery where staff biologists work every day to ensure that the endangered species has a chance to grow and survive. This summer, the turtles will be released into the freshwater ponds in Plymouth from which their eggs were obtained.

Jennifer Beaven of Scituate, a biologist at the Science Center, said the warmth of the water, combined with keeping the turtles well fed and their environment well-lit, speeds up their metabolism. In a year's time, under those conditions, the turtles grow to a size they normally reach in the wild when they are three or four years old.

"We want to get them past the point where they are susceptible to predators," Jennifer said. In the wild, the hatchlings are prey to all kinds of larger animals, including bullfrogs, skunks, fish, raccoons and birds.

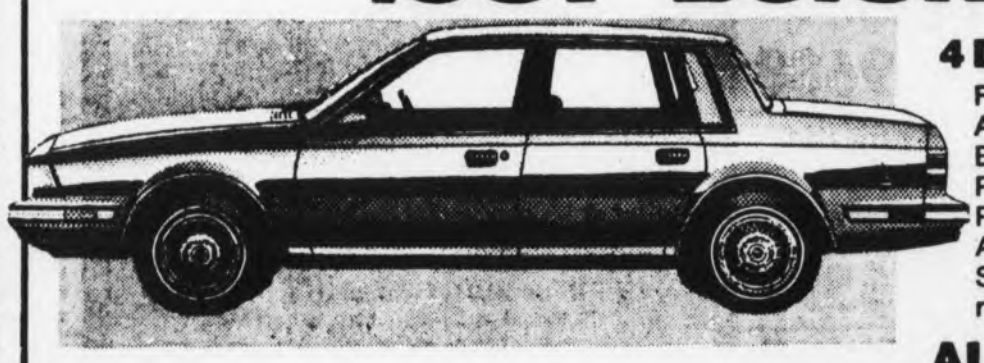
The turtles, known as "Chrysemys rubriventris," were declared a federally endangered species in 1980 by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Since then, Dr. Terry Graham, who teaches biology at Worcester State College, and Thomas French, from the Massachusetts Fisheries and Wildlife Department, had been researching the turtles which are found in ponds, rivers and, in general, relatively large bodies of fresh water. The turtle has been found in southern New Jersey, eastern West Virginia to northeast North Carolina and in Plymouth County.

Dr. Graham, in cooperation with French, is involved in a program called Headstarting, under which turtle eggs are gathered in the wild and hatched in the lab. The hatchlings then spend about a year in a controlled environment so they can grow large enough to be released back into their home ponds without being eaten by predators.

Dr. Graham has estimated that there are fewer than 300 red-bellied turtles living in freshwater ponds in the Plymouth area. In the wild, only about one turtle in 100 reaches a breeding age of five years.

The Science Center started with 13 red-bellied turtles and all have survived, which in itself is quite an accomplishment, Jennifer said. She added that in the wild, the turtles would eat whatever grows naturally in their pond. In the tank at the Science Center, they are primarily fed red-leafed lettuce.

The turtle presenters - Trygve Swift, Sandra Palmer and Jennifer Beaven



The turtles are measured every week by Science Center staffers including Jennifer, biologist Sandra Palmer of Norwell and biologist and new youth director Trygve Swift. Together, they share the daily care of the nursery.

A month or so before the turtles are due to be released, temperatures in the glass tank will be gradually lowered to allow them to acclimate themselves to temperatures back in the Plymouth area ponds.

Biologists can tell if the Headstarting program accomplished its goal of increasing the wild population of red-bellied turtles by looking at the shell of each turtle which is marked using a coded system of notches. (Jennifer cautioned that such marking must only be done by experts because improper notching can kill a turtle.) Once marked, individual turtles can be identified in the field and may permit biologists to monitor their movements on land, reproduction, life spans and population levels.

Anyone who thinks they have seen a red-bellied turtle is asked to contact Dr. Graham at the Department of Biology, Worcester State College, Worcester, 01602, or call Jennifer at the Science Center. The best advice is to get a number from the turtle's yellow numbered disc tag, if it has one, and report the location, date and direction of travel when last seen.

Through information obtained from the public, two previously unreported populations of the turtles were discovered in Carver. Science and scientists depend on such information to obtain a better understanding of the turtles and the world in which they live.
